have been substantial injury and that such injury should have been sustained by the applicant by reason of the irregularity or fraud. A Court has no jurisdiction to set aside a sale under this rule without going into the question of substantial injury.[1] That is to say, the applicant must prove substantial injury in addition to the material irregularity, or fraud in publishing and conducting the sale and mere proof of irregularity or fraud alone is of no avail.[2] The onus of proving substantial injury lies on the applicant.[3]

"Injury" means loss which is wrongful.[4] Such loss must also be substantial.[5] The fact that the price realised at the sale is less than the value stated in the proclamation of sale is no proof of wrongful loss.[6] Nor is the market value of the property a safe criterion in finding substantial injury.[7]

Where, in a case it was found that there had been material irregularity in the conduct of the sale and the property fetched an inadequate price in consequence, the mere fact that the real value of the property did not exceed the amount of the decree and that the unsatisfied balance of the decree could not be realized from the judgment-debtor on account of limitation, would not bring the case within the provisio to this rule.[8]

40. Applicant must have sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity or fraud.—As has been already mentioned in Note 39 above, in order that an applicant under this rule may have a sale set aside, a mere proof of irregularity is not enough; he must show that he sustained substantial injury as a result of such material irregularity or fraud.[1] In the absence of evidence to show that the injury is the result of irregularity, the Court cannot presume from the proved existence of irregularity and injury, that the latter occurred by reason of the former.[1-a]

The proviso to S. 311 of the old Code provided that "no sale shall be set aside . . . . unless the applicant proves to the satisfaction of the Court that he has sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity." In a case[2] arising under that section their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows:—"Their Lordships cannot accept the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner that loss is to be inferred from the mere fact that a sale was held without full compliance with the provisions of the S. 290 (now R. 68 of O. 21). The section clearly contemplates direct evidence on the subject". Relying upon this passage, the High Court of Allahabad[3] held that it was not sufficient for an applicant under S. 311 to prove material irregularity and injury, but that he must connect the irregularity with the inadequacy of price as cause and effect, by means of direct evidence. But the High Courts of Calcutta[4] and Madras[5] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Oudh[6] held that the relation of cause and effect between a proved material irregularity and inadequacy of price may either be established by direct evidence or be inferred, where such inference is reasonable from the nature of the irregularity and the extent of the inadequacy of the price. As regards the phrase "direct evidence" used by their Lordships of the Privy Council, it was held that their Lordships intended only to say that there must be evidence showing that substantial injury was the necessary result of the irregularity complained of.[7] The substitution of the words "unless upon the facts proved the Court is satisfied" in this rule gives legislative recognition to the latter view.[8] In order to connect the two things the applicant should point out some facts from which the Court can reasonably infer substantial injury from the irregularity or fraud complained of.[9] Thus, where in a sale proclamation the property is undervalued and it has been sold at an inadequate price, the sale may be set aside.[10] The reason is that where the irregularity is an understatement of the probable price of the property, the connection is so near that it is open to the Court to infer without any other evidence that injury has resulted from the irregularity.[11]

clamation of sale before it is issued and neglects to take any objection to the proceedings, he will not afterwards be allowed to object to the sale under this rule on any of the grounds which he might have then urged.[1] The reason of this rule of estoppel is stated by their Lordships of the Privy Council as follows:—"It would be very difficult indeed to conduct proceedings in execution of decrees by attachment and sale of property, if the judgment-debtors could lie by and afterwards take advantage of any misdescription of the property attached and about to be sold, which they knew well, but of which the execution creditor or decree-holder might be perfectly ignorant, that they should take no notice of that, allow the sale to proceed, and then come forward and say the whole proceedings were vitiated".[2] The same principle will apply if the judgment-debtor had consented to the irregularity before sale.[3]

Where a judgment-debtor applies for postponement of the sale and gets it adjourned, he must be deemed to have admitted that the proclamation was correct, or at any rate, there was no such mistake or irregularity as would be likely to mislead.[4] The judgment-debtor cannot also urge any objections to the sale if at the time of postponement of the sale he consented to waive any irregularity.[5] Where, however, he was not aware of the facts to which he was bound to object at the time where he had an opportunity of so doing, there can be no waiver or estoppel.[6] The reason is that a person can be taken to have waived only such rights as were within his knowledge.

In the following instances it has been held that there is no waiver:— O.21, R.90, Note 41.

(1) Where a judgment-debtor agrees to waive an irregularity provided the sale is postponed, but the Court does not allow such postponement, there can be no relinquishment of his right to object to the sale.[7]

(2) Where the judgment-debtor waives the issue of a fresh proclamation only, he can urge any objection on the ground of an irregularity in the publication of the original proclamation.[8]

(3) Even though a sale is postponed at the instance of the debtor on the condition that fresh proclamation is waived, if an attaching decree-holder subsequently applies that a fresh proclamation should issue and that prayer is refused, the latter can question the sale on the ground of want of fresh proclamation.[9]

(4) A judgment-debtor who waives a fresh proclamation will not be deemed to have waived the non-specification of the hour of sale on the day to which the sale is postponed.[10]

(5) The fact that the applicant himself bid at the sale will not amount to a waiver of the irregularity.[11]

Where a judgment-debtor's objection to an irregularity made before sale is overruled by the Court, he is not precluded from urging the same ground in an application to set aside the sale.[12]

Where, during the pendency of an application under this rule to set aside a sale, the debtor got time for paying the decree amount on condition that the petition should be dismissed on his failure to do so, he would be estopped, on his failure to abide by the agreement, from continuing the proceedings.[13]

A question of waiver is a mixed question of law and fact.[14]

As to whether an objection can be taken in the event of appeal, see Note 43, infra.

42. Bona fide purchaser for value without notice.—Where the conditions laid down in this rule are satisfied, the fact that the auction purchaser is a stranger and a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of irregularity or fraud will not prevent the sale from being set aside.[1] See also Note 37 ante. The plea of bona fide purchaser for value may, however, be given effect to in proceedings or suits to set aside sales on the ground that the decree and the execution proceedings are tainted by fraud and collusion.[2]

43. Setting aside sale on grounds not taken in the application.—It has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad and Lahore that where an application under this rule is made on certain grounds, it is not open to the applicant to ask the Court to adjudicate upon objections which were not expressly taken in the application, after the period of limitation has expired.[1] But he can apply, even after the expiry of thirty days, to be allowed to furnish further particulars and this application may be treated as one to amend the original application.[2] The High Court of Madras has, however, held that there is nothing to prevent a Court even in appeal from considering the validity of the sale from every point of view and exercise its inherent powers in setting aside a sale on a ground not pleaded.[3] But a new ground requiring evidence cannot be taken for the first time in appeal.[4]

44. Joinder of claims under S. 47.—A prayer for a relief coming within the scope of S. 47 can be joined with a prayer for a relief under this rule in one and the same application.[1] Every application to set aside a sale involves a question relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree and therefore comes within the scope of S. 47. But where the application falls within the scope of this rule also besides S. 47 a second appeal

O.21, R.90, Note 49.

49. Limitation.—It has been already mentioned in Note 37 ante that an application to set aside a sale on account of fraud in publishing and conducting the sale fell within the scope of S. 244 (now S. 47). It was therefore held that under Art. 178 (now Art. 181) of the Limitation Act of 1877, the period of limitation for such an application was three years from the date of the sale.[1] Under the Limitation Act of 1908, an application to set aside a sale in execution of a decree is governed by Art. 166 of that Act which provides for a period of thirty days from the date of sale. Therefore an application under this rule whether made on the ground of material irregularity or fraud must be made within thirty days of the date of sale.[2] The starting point of limitation is the date on which the officer conducting the sale has accepted the final bid and therefore the period of limitation does not begin to run until then.[3]

The period of limitation prescribed by Art. 166 cannot be enlarged by S. 5 of the Limitation Act.[4] Where an execution sale was held by the Collector to whom the decree was transferred for execution, and the applicant applied to the Collector under this rule and after the expiry of thirty days preferred a second application to the Court, the time spent in prosecuting the first application cannot be excluded under S. 14 of the Limitation Act.[5] Where the applicant was a minor on the date of sale he is entitled to the benefit of S. 7 of the Limitation Act in computing the period of limitation for an application under this rule.[6]

Where, in an application under this rule made more than thirty days of the sale, the applicant relies upon fraud as an exemption from limitation, he must bring his case within S. 18 of the Limitation Act.[7] Where a sale is brought about by fraud, for instance, by suppression of processes and submission of false returns, and an application to set aside the sale is made more than thirty days after the date of the sale, it is not enough for the applicant to show that the execution proceedings were irregular and fraudulent, but he must carry the fraud further and show that the existence of his right to set aside the sale has been kept concealed from his knowledge by the fraud of the decree-holder or auction purchaser.[8] When once such fraud has been established by the applicant, it is for the opposite party to show at what precise point of time the applicant had clear and definite knowledge of the facts which would entitle him to apply for setting aside the sale. The reason is that the fraud is a continuing influence and until that influence ends, it retains its power of mischief.[9] O.21, R.90, Notes 49—50.

In cases where fraud is relied on in support of an application made after time, it is immaterial that the application is made after confirmation of the sale.[10]

49-a. Step-in-aid of execution.—An application by a decree-holder praying for the dismissal of an application made by the judgment-debtor under this rule is a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of Art. 182 of the Limitation Act.[1]

50. Appeal.—O. 43, R. 1, Cl. (j) provides for an appeal against an order under R. 92, infra setting aside or refusing to set aside a sale.[1] S. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act as amended by the Bengal Legislative Council in 1928 allows an appeal against an order under that rule.[2] irregularity and that an application to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud in publishing and conducting the sale fell within the scope of S. 244. It was therefore held that no second appeal lay against an order on an application seeking to set aside a sale on the ground of material irregularity,[3] but that if fraud was the ground of the application, a second appeal would lie if the matter was between parties to the suit.[4] But under this Code an order on an application under this rule, whether made on the ground of material irregularity or on the ground of fraud, is not open to second appeal by virtue of the provisions of S. 104.[5] The result will be the same even if the question fell within S. 47; for, the order being appealable as an order will not fall within the definition of the term 'decree' in S. 2 ante. As to the right of second appeal in cases where objections are taken both under this rule and under S. 47, see Note 44 ante.

No appeal lies under the Letters Patent against the order of a single Judge of the High Court made on appeal or in revision against the order of an executing Court in an application under this rule.[6]

The provisions of S. 104 and O. 43, R. 1 cannot restrict the provisions relating to appeals to the King in Council. Therefore, an appeal to the Privy Council will lie against an order of the High Court under R. 92.[7] O.21, R.90, Notes 50—51.

An order dismissing an application under this rule for default is appealable under O. 43, R. 1, the effect of such order being the confirmation of the sale.[8] The fact that a distinct order confirming the sale has not been recorded does not alter the character of the order and is no ground for refusing to entertain an appeal.[9] But an order refusing to restore an application under this rule which has been dismissed for default is not appealable.[10] The reason is, as already mentioned, in Note 48 ante, that O. 9 does not apply to proceedings under this rule.

51. Revision.—Where a sale is set aside under this rule without proof of substantial injury[1] or on the application of a person who is not entitled to apply[2] the order is open to revision. But an order passed by a Court under this rule in the exercise of its jurisdiction is not revisable even though it may be erroneous.[3] An order dismissing an application under this rule

O.21, R.91. Note 1.

1. Scope of the rule.—The general principle is that a Court sale carries with it no guarantee that the property is the property of the judgment-debtor; the auction purchaser takes the risk and bears the loss if it is subsequently discovered not to be the property of the judgment-debtor. A sale in execution of a decree is, therefore, not void by reason of the fact that the property sold does not belong to the judgment-debtor.[1] This rule may be described as an exception to the general principle in that it allows an auction purchaser to set aside sale by an application under this rule, on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold. The object of the rule is to provide a quick and inexpensive remedy in such cases by which the auction purchaser could get out of his difficulty.[2] But the rule is intended for the protection of an innocent auction purchaser; where therefore the purchaser knew at the time of the sale that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold, he is not entitled to the benefit of the provisions of this rule.[3]

It follows from what has been stated above that an auction sale cannot be set aside on the ground of the want of a saleable interest in the judgment-debtor, except by an application under this rule within the period of limitation prescribed therefor. Where, therefore, no application under this rule is filed within time and the sale is confirmed under Rule 92, the auction purchaser cannot treat the sale as void or apply for execution again on the ground that he has subsequently discovered that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold. This is the view of the High Court of Madras. The High Court of Patna has, however, held that the proposition that no judicial sale can be set aside for want of saleable interest in the judgment-debtor, except by a resort to the procedure of O. 21, is not well founded; it has accordingly held that where in a suit to which both the auction purchaser and the judgment-debtor were parties the auction sale has been declared to be invalid as against a stranger, the sale must, in effect, be taken to have been set aside, and the auction purchaser, if he is the decree-holder, can again apply for execution.[5]

Where a sale in execution of a decree is set aside on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold, the execution proceedings are revived and the decree-holder can file an application for execution again within three years of the judgment of the Court setting aside the sale.[6]

This rule does not apply to sales held under the Bengal Tenancy Act 1885[7] or to sales under the Orissa Tenancy Act (II of 1913) [S. 228, sub-S. (3)] or to proceedings under the Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908). [S. 192, sub-S. (a)]. It does not also apply to sales held by the Registrar under Chapter 27 of the Calcutta High Court Rules.[8]

This rule is applicable to proceedings under the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, see R. 95, Note 1 below.

Where after a sale in execution of a decree, a third party files a suit for a declaration that the properties belong to him, and the purchaser thereupon files an application that he should be allowed to pay the purchase money after the decision of the declaratory suit, it has been held that such an application is not one under this rule and is not justified by any provision in the Code.[9]

2. Saleable interest.— See also Note 5 to S. 60 ante. The words 'no saleable interest' in this rule mean 'nothing to sell' and are not intended to be confined to cases where a judgment-debtor's interest is unsaleable either by prohibition of law or for some other reason.[1] Where there is a total failure of consideration for the price paid by the purchaser at a Court sale by reason of the fact that the judgment-debtor has no saleable interest whatever in the property sold, the sale can be set aside on an application under this rule.[2] But where the judgment-debtor has some saleable interest, however small it may be, the purchaser buys at his own risk and, there being no warranty that the property sold shall answer to the description given of it, the sale cannot be set aside under this rule.[3] Thus, where in a Court sale several parcels of immoveable properties are sold in one lot and it is found that the judgment-debtor has a saleable interest in one of such parcels and none in others, this rule does not apply.[4] The fact that it is found that the property sold is subject to a mortgage does not mean that the debtor has no saleable interest[5] and this is so, even if the amount due under the encumbrance exceeds the value of the property.[6] O.21, R.91, Notes 2—7.

The saleable interest contemplated by this rule is the interest on the date of sale.[7] Thus, where a decree for foreclosure of certain mortgaged properties, allowed time till 20—7—1883 to the mortgagor to redeem and the property was sold in execution of a money decree on 30—6—1883, it was held that the fact that before the confirmation of the sale, the judgment-debtor had lost his interest was immaterial and that this rule did not apply inasmuch as, on the date of sale, he had a saleable interest.[8]

3. Who may apply under this rule.—It is only the auction purchaser that is entitled to apply under this rule.[1] The judgment-debtor cannot apply under this rule.[2] Where the purchase is made by an executor of the deceased judgment-debtor in his personal capacity, he is not debarred from applying under this rule, even though he had applied under R. 90, ante in the capacity of executor.[3]

4. Necessary parties to application.—A person alleged by the auction purchaser to be the real owner of the property is not a necessary party to an application under this rule, as he is not a person who will be affected by order.[1] See also Notes to R. 92, infra.

5. Limitation.—An application under this rule is governed by Art. 166 of the Limitation Act and must be made within thirty days of the date of the sale.[1]

6. To what Court application should be made where execution is transferred to Collector.—Where a decree is transferred for execution to the Collector, an application under this rule should be made to the Civil Court and not to the Collector.[1]

O.21, R.91, Note 8.

8. Compensation for loss of property bought at Court sale.—As has been seen in Note 1 above there is no warranty of title in Court sales.[1] The reason is, as observed by Peacock, C. J.—"A purchaser at a sale in execution knows that all that he purchases is the right, and title of the judgment-debtor. He knows that no one guarantees to him that the judgment-debtor has a good title, and he purchases the property with his eyes open, and he regulates the price which he bids for the land with reference to the circumstances under which he is purchasing, and the risk he runs".[2]

Now, suppose that, subsequent to the sale, the auction purchaser finds that the judgment-debtor has title only to a portion of the property, that is to say, that he has only a fractional interest. It has been already mentioned in Note 2 ante that to such a case this rule does not apply. Has the purchaser got any other remedy? On the principle mentioned above, he cannot claim to recover a proportionate part of the purchase money by way of compensation either by an application in the execution proceedings[3] or by a separate suit.[4] Where the purchaser is induced by misrepresentation or fraudulent concealment, to buy the property for a price much more than it is really worth, the purchaser has no remedy under this rule.[5] He can, however, recover compensation in a separate suit.[6]

It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that in the case of execution sales held by the Registrar on the original side of that Court, the purchaser is entitled to recover compensation for deficiency of the interest of the judgment-debtor.[7] See also Note 1 ante.

An execution sale is also liable to be set aside on account of the misrepresentations of the Officer, conducting the sale, which has led to a useless property being sold for a high price.[8] The reason is that it is incumbent on

When sale is to be set aside under this rule. See Note 2.

1. Legislative changes.—

1. Under S. 312 of the old Code, the Court was bound to confirm the sale only if no application under S. 311 (now R. 90) had been made or if such application is made and disallowed. Under the present rule the Court should confirm the sale only where no application is made under Rules 89, 90 or 91 or where such application is made and disallowed.
2. The words "as regards the parties to the suit" which occurred in the first para. of S. 312 of the old Code have been omitted. See the undermentioned case.[1]
3. The words "on the ground of such irregularity" after the words "no suit to set aside" in the last para. of S. 312 corresponding to sub-Rule (3) have been omitted.

2. Scope of the rule.—This rule provides for the confirmation of sale in certain cases and for the setting aside of the sale in certain other cases. A sale should be confirmed where no application is made under Rr. 89, 90 or 91 or where such application is made and disallowed. It is the duty of the Court in such cases to confirm the sale,[1] even without an application by, or the presence of, the party concerned.[2] Upon such confirmation the sale will become absolute.[3] A formal order, however, is not necessary, and, where, from the action of the executing Court, it is clear that the Court intended to confirm the sale, the absence of a formal order to that effect will be immaterial.[4] O.21, R.92, Note 2.

A sale should be set aside under this rule where an application under Rr. 89, 90 or 91, is made and allowed. But this does not mean that the Court has no power to set aside an execution sale on any ground whatever in the absence of such an application. Under its inherent powers, the Court can refuse to confirm the sale or can set it aside where it has been misled by the decree-holder or where there has been abuse of the process of Court,[5] or where the decree has been reversed before the date of confirmation of the sale.[6] But a sale is not liable to be set aside merely on the ground that the application for execution was time barred,[7] or on the ground that the decree has been amended.[8] As to the effect of the reversal of a decree on the rights of the auction-purchaser see Note 13 to S. 144. As to the effect of an adjustment of the decree after sale and before confirmation see Notes to O. 21, R. 2 and R. 89 and the undermentioned cases.[8-a]

Where an application to set aside the sale is made under the inherent powers of the Court,[9] or where an application is made under R. 90 after the expiry of thirty days from the date of the sale relying on S. 18 of the Limitation Act,[10] the fact that the sale has been confirmed is no bar to the maintainability of the application.

O.21, R.92, Notes 2—4.

Where a sale is set aside, and, in the meanwhile, the purchaser has obtained possession of the properties, the Court has got inherent power to order restitution to be made.[11] See also Note 34 to S. 144.

A decree-holder is entitled to interest on the decretal amount up to the date of confirmation, inasmuch as he is not bound to withdraw the money deposited by the auction-purchaser before the sale is confirmed.[12]

The effect of an order setting aside the sale is to remit the parties to the position in which they stood before the date of the sale.[13]

3. Deposit made within thirty days.—See Note 28 to O. 21, R. 89.

4. Necessary parties and notice to them.—It has been seen in the notes to Rr. 89, 90 and 91 ante that an application under these rules to set aside the sale must be made within thirty days of the date of the sale under Art. 166 of the Limitation Act. If no such application is made within time the sale cannot be set aside under this rule.[1]

Before an order setting aside a sale under this rule is made, it is essential that notice of the application should be given to all persons affected by the order thereon.[2] An order setting aside the sale, made without giving such persons an opportunity of being heard, is without jurisdiction.[3] But it is not necessary that the notice should be given within thirty days of the date of the sale.[4]

It is not necessary that the persons that would be affected by an order under this rule need be described as parties in the application: it is sufficient

if the notice required by this rule is given to them.[5] Where an application to set aside a sale was made bona fide impleading the decree-holder as a party, but he was dead on the date of the application, and his legal representative was brought on the record after the expiry of the period of limitation, it was held in the undermentioned case that the application would not be defeated by reason of the fact that the legal representative of the decree-holder was not impleaded within the period of limitation.[6]

Where the auction-purchaser is alleged to be a benamidar for a third party it is not necessary to give notice to the latter under this rule.[7] Persons who have applied for rateable distribution in the proceeds of an execution sale have no such direct or proximate interest as would entitle them to notice under this rule.[8]

5. Suit to set aside sale when barred.—S. 312 of the old Code provided in the last para thereof that "no suit to set aside on the ground of such irregularity, an order passed under this section shall be brought . . . . . etc." In the undermentioned cases these words were interpreted as not including suits to confirm the sale which had been set aside under S. 312.[1] These cases are now no longer law in view of the alteration effected in sub-R. 3 of the present rule, which enacts that "no suit to set aside an order made under this rule shall be brought, etc."

A suit to set aside an execution sale on grounds covered by Rr. 89, 90 and 91 is barred by sub-R. 3,[2] inasmuch as the suit would in effect be one to set aside an order under this rule.

O.21, R.92, Notes 5—6.

A suit to set aside a sale in execution on grounds other than those covered by Rr. 89, 90 and 91 is not within the prohibition of sub-R. 3 and is, therefore, not barred by it.[3] Thus, where the decree and the sale are attacked on the ground of fraud (not covered by R. 90)[4] or where the sale is attacked on the ground of want of jurisdiction,[5] a suit to set aside such a sale on those grounds is not barred by this rule. Where in execution of a mortgage decree a property not included in the mortgage was sold, a suit by the mortgagor to recover possession of the property from the mortgagee purchaser was held not to be barred by this rule.[6]

The rules relating to the execution of decrees under this Code do not apply to insolvency proceedings: a suit, therefore, questioning an order dismissing an application to set aside a sale held by the Insolvency Court is not barred by this rule.[7]

6. Plea of irregularity or fraud in defence.—Where a party applies under R. 90, ante to set aside the sale and the application is dismissed, he will, in answer to a suit by the purchaser for possession, be barred by res judicata from impeaching the sale on the same grounds.[1] Even if no such application is made, such a plea in defence cannot, be raised after confirmation of the sale.[2] The reason is that the sale becomes absolute and the order confirming the sale amounts to a judicial determination that none of the objections exists upon which the validity of the sale could have been questioned. Nor can a third person impeach the title of the auction-purchaser on the ground of any alleged irregularities in the execution sale.[3] O.21, R.92, Notes 6—7.

It has been held in the undermentioned cases[4] that the fact that an application under R. 89 or R. 90 has been dismissed will not preclude the mortgagor-judgment-debtor from pleading by way of defence in a suit by the auction-purchaser for possession, that the properties sold were not included either in the mortgage or in the decree thereon.

7. Suits to set aside sales under other Acts.

(1) Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act III of 1913).—It was held under the repealed Act I of 1895 that this rule did not apply to sales held in enforcement of a certificate under that Act and that a suit to set aside such a sale was maintainable.[1] See S. 25 of Act III of 1913.

(2) Bengal Tenancy Act (Act VIII of 1885).—It has been held that this rule does not apply to sales held under the Bengal Tenancy Act, inasmuch as S. 174 thereof contains a complete rule on the subject.[2] There is a conflict of opinion as to whether a suit is maintainable to set aside or to confirm such a sale. See the cases cited below.[3]

(3) Madras Estates Land Act (Act I of 1908.)—A suit will lie to set aside a sale held under the Madras Estates Land Act.[5]

8. Limitation for suits to set aside sales.—In cases not covered by this rule and to which the bar under sub-rule does not apply, a suit to set aside an execution sale should be brought within one year from the date of confirmation of sale under Art. 12 of the Limitation Act of 1908.[1] That Article however does not apply where the sale is a nullity.[2] Such a sale does not require to be set aside, but may be declared to be void. A third person whose property has been sold is not bound by the sale and a suit by him for setting aside the sale is not governed by Art. 12 of the Limitation Act.[3]

9. Court-fee on a plaint to set aside sale.—A suit to set aside an auction sale for arrears of revenue is in no sense a suit for a mere declaration without consequential relief.[1] The plaint in such a suit should be stamped as if it were a suit for recovery of the property sold.[2]

10. Sale by Receiver.—A sale by a Receiver appointed by a Court is not one in execution of a decree and need not be confirmed under this rule.[1]

11. Sale held by Collector—Confirmation.—The Collector to whom a decree has been transferred for execution is not a Court executing the decree.[1] The Civil Court is the proper Court to confirm a sale held by the Collector.[2] See Notes 2, 4, 5 and 6 to S. 70.

12. Confirmation before thirty days.—No sale can be confirmed or can become absolute under this rule before the expiry of the period of 30 days from the date of the sale.[1]

13. Appeal.—An order under this rule setting aside or refusing to set aside an execution sale is appealable under O. 43, R. 1 (j) of the Code.[1] An order merely confirming the sale in the absence of an application to set it aside[2] or an order refusing to confirm a sale on the ground that the decree had been satisfied[3] is not an order setting aside or refusing to set aside a sale and is, therefore, not appealable. Similarly an order setting aside a sale suo motu under the Court's inherent powers is not one under this rule and is not appealable.[4] As to whether an appeal lies from an order setting aside or refusing to set aside a sale under the Madras Estates Land Act or the Bengal Tenancy Act or the Agra Tenancy Act, see the following cases.[5]

No second appeal will lie from an order setting aside or refusing to set aside a sale under this rule.[6] See S. 104, sub-S. 2. As to whether an appeal lies under the Letters Patent against an order under this rule, see Note 50 to O. 21, R. 90 and the undermentioned cases.[7]

15. Step-in-aid of execution.—An application or an objection preferred by the decree-holder praying that an application to set aside a sale should not be granted is a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of Art. 182 of the Limitation Act.[1] But an application merely asking for a confirmation of sale where no application under Rr. 89, 90 or 91 is preferred is not a step-in-aid of execution; inasmuch as it is the duty of the Court to confirm the sale even in the absence of any application for the purpose.[2] Nor will the mere act of confirmation by the Court amount to a step-in-aid by the party.[3]

"Where a sale of immoveable property is set aside under S. 310-A, 312 or 313, or when it is found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property which was purported to be sold, and the purchaser is for that reason deprived of it, the purchaser shall be entitled to receive back his purchase money (with or without interest as the Court may direct) from any person to whom the purchase money has been paid.

The repayment of the said purchase money and of the interest (if any) allowed by the Court may be enforced against such person under the rules provided for by this Code for the execution of a decree for money."

As to the effect of the changes introduced into this rule, see Notes 3 and 4 infra.

2. "Where a sale of immoveable property is set aside under R. 92." —Where a sale of immoveable property is set aside under R. 92, supra, the auction-purchaser is entitled to an order under this rule for repayment of the purchase-money.[1] The decree-holder is also entitled to apply for a fresh sale but limitation therefor under Art. 181 of the Limitation Act does not begin to run until he is compelled to refund the purchase-money.[2]

This rule is applicable to sales for arrear of rent under the Orissa Tenancy Act (II of 1913), S. 228, sub-S. 2, as well as to sales of immoveables under the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, see R. 95 below.

3. Sale set aside for want of saleable interest.—It has been already mentioned in Notes 1 and 8 to R. 91, supra that there is no warranty of title in Court-sales. The purchaser must be taken to buy the property with all risks and all defects in the judgment-debtor's title, except as provided by R. 91 and this rule.[1] But this rule as well as R. 91 will apply only to cases of entire absence of interest in the judgment-debtor and not to cases where the judgment-debtor has some interest in the property, however small that may be.[2]

Under S. 315 of the old Code the purchaser could apply for refund of the purchase-money even where it was found in a separate suit that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold.[3] The omission of the words "where it is found that the judgment-debtor has no saleable interest . . . . . " in the present rule, now makes it clear that the purchaser is not entitled to apply for refund of purchase-money unless the sale is set aside under R. 92.[4]

Where a Court-sale is set aside on an application under R. 91, ante and the auction-purchaser thereupon withdraws the money but the sale is subsequently confirmed by the appellate Court, the Court can, under its inherent powers, compel the auction-purchaser to refund the money so withdrawn.[5]

4. Suit for purchaser-money in such cases.—Where it is found that the judgment-debtor has no saleable interest in the properties sold, can the purchaser institute a suit for refund of purchase-money?

O. 21, R. 93, Note 4.

Under the Code of 1859 there was no provision for the return of the purchase-money in cases where the judgment-debtor was found to have no saleable interest. It was, therefore, held applying the general principle of caveat emptor that a purchaser could not claim to recover the purchase-money on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest.[1] S. 315 of the Code of 1882 gave the purchaser the right to set aside the sale and recover the purchase-money where the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold. That section also provided that such right "may be enforced" under the rules provided by this Code for the execution of a decree for money. It was held, however, that the purchaser's remedy was not limited to the procedure prescribed in the execution department but that he could file a separate suit for the purchase-money.[2]

Material alterations have been made in this rule and there is a conflict of opinion under this Code as to whether a separate suit will lie. The words "may be enforced, etc." have now been omitted and the words "the purchaser shall be entitled to an order for the repayment of his purchase-money" substituted. It has been held by all the High Courts except the High Court of Lahore and the Chief Court of Oudh that the auction-purchaser's right of suit has been taken away under this Code and that his only remedy is that prescribed in R. 91, ante and this rule.[3] The result is that where a purchaser finds, after the expiry of thirty days from the date of the sale, that the judgment-debtor has no saleable interest in the property sold, he has no remedy whatever. Where, however, the purchaser is induced to buy the property on account of fraud or misrepresentation or gross neglect of duty on the part of the decree-holder, he can maintain a suit for the recovery of purchase money.[4] The High Court of Lahore and the Chief Court of Oudh have taken the view that R. 92 ante and this rule have no application to a case where the auction-purchaser has been deprived of the property purchased by him after the confirmation of the sale owing to the action of a person having paramount title to it and on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in it; that in such cases he obtains a right under the substantive law for refund of the purchase money; and not under this rule.[5]

The right of the auction-purchaser to maintain a suit for refund of purchase-money in cases where the sale took place while the old Code was in force must be determined with reference to the provisions of that code.[6]

Where certain properties are sold in execution of a mortgage decree and in a separate suit by a defendant, it is declared that the decree and the sale in execution are not binding on him and the auction-purchaser is deprived of the property, he is entitled to apply for refund of the purchase-money under S. 47.[7]

5. Sale set aside for irregularity.—Where a sale is set aside on account of material irregularity the auction-purchaser is entitled to sue and recover from the decree-holder the amount of poundage which was deducted from the purchase-money deposited by him, as well as interest on such deposit.[1] The reason is that the right of suit in such a case exists independently of the Code and the words "shall be entitled to an order for repayment" do not take away the right of suit to enforce the same.

7. Interest.—When a sale is set aside and a refund of purchase-money is ordered, under this rule, the Court has got power to award interest on the amount of the purchase-money.[1]

8. Value of improvements effected by him.—Where the auction-purchaser gets into possession of the properties sold to him and effects improvements thereon, he is entitled to compensation for such improvements, upon the sale being set aside.[1]

9. Poundage fee.—Where a sale is set aside under R. 92, the purchaser is entitled to a refund of the poundage fee paid by him, but is not entitled to recover it from the judgment-debtor.[1]

As to a suit for recovery of poundage fee see Note 5 ante.

10. Liability for mesne profits.—When an order for refund of purchase-money is made under this rule, the purchaser must account to the judgment-debtor for the rents and profits realised by him, if he has been in possession of the properties purchased.[1]

11. Limitation for such application.—The period of limitation for an application under this rule is three years under Art. 181 of the Limitation Act, 1908, from the date of the order setting aside the sale.[1] Art. 120 of the Limitation Act will apply to cases where it has been held that a suit lies for the refund of purchase-money.[2]

12. Order under this rule—Executability of.—A purchaser, who has obtained an order for refund of purchase-money under this rule, can execute the order as if it were a decree.[1]

13. Appeal and revision.—No appeal lies against an order under this rule, granting, or refusing, refund of the purchase-money to the purchaser.[1] But where the executing Court ordered refund in a case where the judgment-debtor had some saleable interest, it was held that the order was without jurisdiction and should be set aside in revision.[2]

1. Legislative changes.—

This rule corresponds with the first part of S. 316 of the old Code. The latter part of that section has been re-enacted under the present Code in S. 65.

The only important alteration under the present rule is the addition of the words "such certificate shall bear date the day on which the sale became absolute".

2. "The Court shall grant a certificate".—The provisions of this rule are mandatory and impose a positive and imperative duty on the Court to grant a sale certificate.[1] In granting such certificate it is the duty of the Court, not to determine what property is to pass by the sale but merely to record the already accomplished fact of a transaction that has taken place and to state what has been sold. Its action in granting the certificate is ministerial and not judicial.[2]

The provisions of this order do not apply to sales by receivers and the Court neither confirms nor grants certificates in the case of such sales.[3]

This provision applies to sales under the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, VI of 1920. See S. 50 of the Act.

3. Certificate, if transfers title.—The title of the Court auction-purchaser becomes complete on the confirmation of the sale under R. 92,[1] and under Section 65 the property vests in the purchaser from the date of sale.[2] The certificate of sale does not, by itself, create title but is merely evidence of title.[3] As already observed in the previous note the certificate simply records an accomplished fact and states what has been sold.[4] Hence a mere omission to obtain the certificate does not destroy or take away the title of the purchaser.[5] He can prove his title and purchase by evidence aliunde.[6] The production of the order of confirmation of sale is sufficient to prove his title.[7]

4. To whom certificate should be granted.—The person who is declared to be the purchaser after the bids are concluded, is the person in whose name the certificate should be granted.[1] If there are joint purchasers the certificate should be issued in the names of all of them.[2] If the purchaser is dead. his legal representative is entitled to the certificate.[3] But the Court cannot issue the certificate in favour of an undisclosed principal.[4]

O.21, R.94, Notes 4—6.

5. Contents of certificate of sale.—What is sold at a judicial sale is nothing but the property attached, and that property is conclusively described in, and by the schedule to the order of attachment. The certificate should be granted only in respect of the property attached and proclaimed for sale, and not in respect of some other property treating the case as one of misdescription. It was so laid down in Raja Thakur Barmha v. Jiban Ram Marwari.[1]

In that case A mortgaged a 10 annas share of a mouza belonging to him. B, in execution of a simple money decree against A, attached a 6 annas share which was described in the sale proclamation as being subject to a mortgage and got the same sold in Court auction. The auction-purchaser, in applying for the sale certificate contended that the property sold to him, was the unencumbered, 6 annas share and the word 'not' was omitted in the sale proclamation. It was held by the Judicial Committee that the Court has no jurisdiction to issue the certificate describing the property as unencumbered. If in the above illustration no mention is made of the existence of any encumbrance in the sale proclamation, the prima facie presumption would be that it is the unencumbered 6 annas share that is sought to be attached and sold, and the purchaser would be entitled to the share purchased free from encumbrance.[1a]

The encumbrances existing on the property subject to which the property is sold should be entered in the sale certificate.[2] It is incumbent on the Court to see that the certificate is clear and does not furnish materials for fresh litigation.[3]

6. Construction of sale certificate.—Certificates of sale are documents of title which ought not to be lightly regarded or loosely construed. Where there is no ambiguity in the words of the certificate, the object of the certificate would be defeated if it were possible to change its plain meaning by reference to other documents.[1] The Court ought not to embark upon an enquiry as to what was intended to be sold and must be deemed to have been sold, by reference to surrounding circumstances and other documents.[1-a] Thus where, in execution of a mortgage decree, the sale certificate was issued in respect of "the whole of the Pannai lands belonging to and enjoyed by the sons of the first defendant", the certificate cannot by reference back to the mortgage deed be construed as limiting, in any way, the extent of the Pannai land to which it referred or to exclude any portion of the Pannai.[2] Where, however, the terms of the certificate are ambiguous and stand in need of explanation evidence may be adduced to clear the ambiguity.[3] Evidence may also be let in to identify the property described in the sale certificate.[4] The Court can thus, for this purpose look into the decree[5] and even into the suit document.[6]

The boundaries of the property sold as given in the certificate prevail over the areas mentioned therein.[7] But where the certificate contains only a general description of the boundaries of the whole area sold without specifying the boundaries of the plots sold, the paimash and survey numbers should be taken as far more correct description of what is sold, than the boundaries.[8]

7. Amendment of certificate.—The Court has inherent juridiction to amend a sale certificate incorrectly describing the property actually sold.[1] Thus the Court can rectify a mistake in the description of the boundaries[2] or correct an apparent error therein as, for instance, where the certificate includes properties which were not sold but advertised for sale.[3] But the Court has no jurisdiction to amend the certificate so as to show the purchase of a larger share of the property than what is stated in the proclamation of sale.[4]

A sale certificate should not be amended without notice to the judgment-debtor.[5]

8. What passes at a Court sale.—The general rule in the case of all private sales in that there is an implied warranty of title, in the absence of a contract to the contrary.[1] This rule, however, does not apply to sales in invitum. The principle applicable to such sales is caveat emptor.[2] What is sold in such sales is nothing but the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor; all that is guaranteed is, that the purchaser shall have the right and interest whatever they may be of the judgment-debtor, and that the judgment-debtor shall not recover back the properties sold.[2-a] The purchaser gets the property with all the risks and defects in the judgment-debtor's title.[3] In the absence of fraud, he has no remedy of suit against the judgment-debtor or the decree-holder for any defect in the property sold. It is only in cases where the judgment-debtor is proved to have no saleable interest at all that the purchaser has got the remedy provided for in R. 91, viz., to apply to set aside the sale.[4] If the sale is set aside he would be entitled to a refund of the purchase-money under R. 93. The purchaser gets the property subject to the same restrictions and equities to which the judgment-debtor himself was subject.[5] Thus if the property is subject to any valid encumbrance, the purchaser gets it subject to the same[6] although if the encumbrance turns out to be invalid the benefit of it goes exclusively to the purchaser.[7] Similarly, if the property is subject to a lease or liable for arrears of revenue, the purchaser is also bound by the same.[8] So also where any plea of limitation could have been successfully urged against the judgment-debtor it can also be availed of against the purchaser.[9] If the judgment-debtor had sold the property benami in the name of his wife and she as ostensible owner mortgaged it to a third person, the subsequent purchaser in Court sale cannot acquire any superior right to that of the mortgagee.[10] But a mere omission on the part of the judgment-debtor to take an objection as to want of jurisdiction to execute the decree in another execution proceeding against him, will not operate as an estoppel so as to defeat the rights of the purchaser.[11] The Court-sale would also be effected by lis pendens if the sale is held during the pendency of a suit relating to the same property.[12]

The words 'right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor' are ambiguous words and, in order to determine what passes to the purchaser at a Court-sale, regard must be had to the circumstances under which the suit was brought and the true meaning of the decree under which the sale took place.[13] cution of a simple money decree, the purchaser gets the interest of the judgment-debtor as it stood on the date of the attachment freed from all subsequent private alienations.[18] See also Note 56 to S. 11.

Sale in execution of decree against member of Hindu family.—In a sale in execution of a decree against an undivided member of a joint Hindu family the purchaser buys only an uncertain and fluctuating interest with the right of converting it at any moment after the purchase, by partition, into definite property.[19] If the purchaser buys certain specific properties as belonging to the share of the judgment-debtor, and in a subsequent partition between the members of the family some of the items purchased are allotted to the share of the other members the purchaser cannot compel the judgment-debtor to give him other properties which the judgment-debtor got in substitution. The reason is that in sale in invitum there is no privity of contract between the judgment-debtor and the purchaser; there being no act or representation on the part of the former he is not bound by any rule of estoppel.[20] If the judgment-debtor is the manager of the undivided family and if he is sued substantially in his capacity as manager, the sale of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor will pass the entire interest of all the members of the family provided the debt in respect of which the decree is obtained was incurred for a legal necessity or for the benefit of the family.[21] In a joint Hindu family, the father has a disposing power over the ancestral family property to pay off his antecedent debts not tainted with illegality or immorality. If therefore, a decree is obtained against a Hindu father in respect of a debt which is neither illegal nor immoral and his right, title and interest is sold in execution without any limitation, the sale has the same effect as a private conveyance by the father and the purchaser gets the entire interest in the family property including that of the sons.[22] "All the sons can claim is that, not being parties to the sale or execution proceedings, they ought not to be barred from trying the fact or the nature of the debt in a suit of their own . . . . . If the fact be that the purchaser has bargained and paid for the entirety, he may clearly defend his title to it upon any ground which would have justified a sale if the sons had been brought in to oppose the execution proceedings".[23] There are only two cases in which the sons' interests do not pass in a sale in execution of a decree against the father.

(1) When the father's interest in the property is alone sold excluding that of the sons.

(2) When the debt is proved to be not binding on them.[24]

Sale in execution of a decree against a Hindu limited owner.—In order to determine the interest that passes to a purchaser in execution of a decree against a limited owner such as a Hindu widow, the test to be applied is whether the suit in respect of which the sale was directed was brought against the widow upon a cause of action personal to herself or one which affected the whole inheritance of the property in suit. Where it appears that the decree against the widow is in respect of the inheritance and binds the reversionary heirs, the purchaser of her right, title and interest takes the estate absolutely. No inference can be drawn from the circumstance that the certificate describes the property sold as the right, title and interest of the widow.[25] The matters for consideration in such cases is as pointed out by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J.

(1) What property could have been brought to sale in a properly constituted suit.

(2) What property was actually intended to be sold and bought.

(3) Has there been such an error in the constitution of the suit or the conduct of the proceedings, that effect cannot be properly given to the intention or to state it conversely, has there been a substantial representation of those interested in the property intended to be sold and bought.[26]

9. Variance between proclamation of sale and sale certificate.—When there is a variance between the description of the property as given in the proclamation of sale and as given in the sale certificate, the description in the former should be taken as conclusive and correct.[1] The description in the sale proclamation follows the description of the property attached and as pointed out by the Judicial Committee "what is sold in a Judicial sale is the property described in the schedule to the order of attachment".[2]

A obtains a decree against five brothers and takes out execution against them all. The proclamation of sale describes that the interest of all the brothers are to be sold. B purchases in Court auction. But the order of confirmation of sale as well as the sale certificate by mistake mentioned only the share of the eldest brother as being purchased. In such a case, it has been held, that the entire interest of all the brothers as described in the sale proclamation nevertheless passes to B.[3] O.21, R.94, Notes 9—12.

10. Effect of new interpretation of law on sale.—The rights of the parties in an execution sale are fixed with reference to the state of the law at the time of sale and any subsequent interpretation of the law will not operate so as to affect the result of that sale.[1] In Abdul Aziz v. Appayasami, I.L.R. 27 Mad. 131 P.C. a purchase was made, in Court auction, of the right title and interest of a Zamindar in an impartible Zamindari. By the law as it stood at the time of the sale, the Zamindar took only a life estate. But subsequent to the sale, the law was changed by the Judicial Committee holding that the zamindar took an absolute estate. Taking advantage of the subsequent change in the interpretation of the law the purchaser contended that the entire absolute estate passed to him under the Court sale. The Judicial Committee negatived this contention holding that "the reversal of the previously accepted interpretation of the law does not displace its application to the construction of the contracts contained in the certificate of sale under consideration" and that the "parties must be taken to be bound by the law as it was at the time understood".

11. Effect of certificate of sale.—The irregularities if any in the execution proceedings are cured by the certificate of sale.[1] The purchaser's title becomes complete on the issue of the certificate and he is entitled to apply for possession of the property.[2]

12. Certificate if operates as res judicata.—A sale certificate does not operate as res judicata inasmuch as there cannot be said to have been any litigation as to the title of the property purchased. But persons who are parties to the suit under which the sale took place or their representatives in interest cannot, by virtue of S. 47 question the title of the purchaser.[1] The rights of third parties are, however, not affected by the Court sale.[2]

13. Limitation.—The provisions of the Limitation Act do not apply to an application for the issue of a sale certificate. The reason is that there is no duty imposed on the purchaser to apply for the certificate. The Court is bound as a matter of course to grant the certificate on the sale becoming absolute, and its function in granting the certificate is ministerial and not judicial.[1]

14. Registration of sale certificate.—Under Section 17, Cl. (12) of the Registration Act a certificate of sale is not compulsorily registerable.[1] Under Section 89, Cl. (2) of the same Act the Court should send a copy of the sale certificate to the registering officer.[2]

15. Court-fee on application for sale certificate.—It has been held in the undermentioned cases[1] that an application by the purchaser for the certificate need bear no Court-fee stamp as the rule does not even require the application to be in writing.

16. Appeal.—No appeal lies against an order amending or refusing to amend a sale certificate.[1] In the undermentioned case[2] it was held that an order refusing to grant a certificate in favour of the decree-holder purchaser was not a matter coming under Section 47 and was not appealable.

1. Delivery of possession to purchaser.—See "Procedure under this rule" Note 8, infra.

The holder of a decree for possession of immoveable property may obtain possession of the property under Rr. 35 and 36. An Auction-purchaser to whom a sale certificate has been granted under R. 94, has to apply under this rule or under R. 96, to obtain delivery of possession.[1]

If the property is in the possession of the judgment-debtor, or of some person on his behalf, the purchaser is entitled to actual possession under this rule.[1a] If it is in the possession of tenants or other persons entitled to occupy the same, the purchaser is only entitled to symbolical possession, under R. 96.

Unless the delivery of possession through Court to the auction-purchaser is effected in one of the modes prescribed under Rules 95 and 96, no possession can be deemed to be given.[2] Therefore if a person is dispossessed otherwise than in due course of law as provided by these rules, he may institute a summary suit under S. 9 of the Specific Relief Act to recover possession.[3]

But when once the amin puts the auction-purchaser in possession and the formalities of law are complied with, the delivery is complete,[4] and thereafter the possession of the judgment-debtor or any person becomes that of a trespasser.[5] Therefore if the auction-purchaser is subsequently dispossessed, it will be a cause of action for a regular suit, but no application under these rules is thereafter maintainable.[6]

O.21, R.95, Notes 5—8.

An order for delivery of possession is not a decree for possession and therefore cannot be kept alive by periodical applications.[2] Where an application for delivery was made within 3 years of the date when the sale becomes absolute, but delivery was not effected by reason of laches on the part of the purchaser, a second application under this rule more than 3 years after confirmation of sale will be barred; Art. 181 does not apply to such a case.[3] But if the delivery could not be effected owing to causes beyond the control of the purchaser and the application had been closed, it has been held that the second application should be considered to be a revival of the first and consequently is not barred under Art. 180.[4]

6. Application, if a step-in-aid of execution.—Where the decree-holder himself purchases the property in execution, and applies under this rule for delivery of possession, of the property, the question arises whether such an application is a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of Art. 182, Cl. (5) of the Limitation Act. It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that there is no difference between an application by decree-holder purchaser and by a third party purchaser, to obtain delivery of possession of the property purchased by him, and therefore such an application is not a step-in-aid of execution.[1] But it has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta,[2] Bombay[3] and Madras[4] that an application by a decree-holder purchaser under this rule is still an application in execution and therefore a step-in-aid of execution of the decree within the meaning of Art. 182.

7. Separate suit for possession.—See Note 8, infra and Note 19 to S. 47, ante.

8. Procedure under this rule.—It is not obligatory on the purchaser to apply for delivery of possession under this rule; it is open to him to obtain possession out of Court.[1-a] If he is a stranger purchaser, the remedies by way of an application under this rule, and by way of suit are concurrent.[1] He may bring a suit for possession in the first instance,[2] or may apply under this rule and if unsuccessful[3] or if the summary remedy is barred[4] he may institute a regular suit for possession. (See Note 7, ante.) If however the decree-holder himself is the purchaser See Note 19 to S. 47, ante. See also Note 5 to R. 97, supra.

The jurisdiction of the Court to order delivery under this rule exists only if the property is in the occupancy of judgment-debtor, or of some person on his behalf or of some person claiming under a title created subsequent to the attachment of such property. Therefore if the Court is satisfied on prima facie evidence that the person in possession of the property is holding it on his own account, it has no option but to dismiss the application under this rule.[5] Thus a prior mortgagee who purchased property in execution of his own mortgage decree and who is in possession, is not a judgment-debtor and cannot be dispossessed by the auction-purchaser under this rule.[6] to occupy the same.' The delivery of possession in such cases has to be made in the manner provided by this rule. See R. 35, ante and Note 3, infra. When once the Court passes an order for delivery of possession under this rule, it has thereafter no jurisdiction to stop the issue of the warrant for delivery and to order an enquiry into any objections subsequently raised in the matter.[1-a]

3. Delivery of property in the occupancy of a tenant.—If the property is in the occupancy of a tenant or other person entitled to occupy the same, the auction-purchaser is only entitled to symbolical delivery of possession under this rule.[1] Therefore, where the auction-purchaser dispossessed a tenant under a warrant for delivery of possession under R. 95, ante, the tenant will be entitled to bring a suit for possession under S. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, as the dispossession could not be said to be in due course of law.[2]

4. Purchase of undivided share.—The holder of a decree for possession of an undivided share in a property may obtain joint possession in the manner provided in R. 35, ante. There is no corresponding provision for delivery of joint possession to the purchaser of an undivided share in a property. But in such cases possession should be delivered under the provisions of O. 21, R. 95, read with R. 35, sub-R. (2): this rule does not apply to such a case.[1] Where the purchase is of an undivided share in a joint Hindu family, the remedy of the purchaser is only to institute a suit for partition and for possession of the share of the judgment-debtor.[2] Where the judgment-debtor is a co-sharer and is himself in exclusive possession,[3] or where the entire rights of the joint family are sold in auction,[4] the purchaser is entitled to actual possession of the property under R. 95, ante.

5. Symbolical delivery.—See R. 35, ante. Symbolical possession is different from "paper possession" that is, the possession obtained by a party who being entitled to actual possession, only obtains delivery of possession on paper, without getting actual possession.[1] See also Note 3 above.

6. Limitation.—See Note 5 to R. 95, ante.

Under S. 319 of the Code of 1882, it was held that it was the duty of the Court to order symbolical delivery of possession and that there was no period of limitation for delivery of possession under that section.[1] The

It is necessary, before an investigation is made under this rule, that an application should be made to the Court by the decree-holder or auction-purchaser.[5] The Court cannot order investigation suo motu,[6] or on the Amin's or Nazir's report,[7] or on the application of the judgment-debtor,[8] or of third parties.[9] It has, however, been held that the Court may direct investigation under this rule on an oral application by the person obstructed.[10] The Court may adjudicate upon questions of title between the contending parties in regard to their right to possession and pass orders under Rr. 98 or 99, infra.[11] The order passed on such investigation is final subject to the result of the suit under R. 103, infra. O.21, R.97, Notes 1—3.

The procedure under this rule is permissive and not mandatory.[12] See Notes 3, 4 and 5, infra.

This rule applies also to decrees for possession under R. 9 of the Specific Relief Act,[13] but does not apply to proceedings for delivery of possession under the Provincial Insolvency Act[14] or the Mamlatdar's Act[15] (Bombay Act III of 1876).

2. "Decree for possession"—Partition decrees.—A decree for partition of immoveable property is a decree for possession within the meaning of this rule.[1]

3. Limitation.—The period of limitation for an application under this rule is thirty days from the date of the resistance or obstruction (Indian Limitation Act, Art. 167). The resistance or obstruction is not necessarily the first resistance or obstruction, and every time the decree-holder or auction-purchaser is obstructed, he obtains a fresh cause of action and he may apply within thirty days of such obstruction.[1] See Notes 4 and 5, infra.

4. Fresh application for delivery: if can be made.—If the holder of a decree for possession applies for delivery of possession, but is resisted or obstructed in obtaining possession, it is not obligatory on him to proceed under this rule; he may either apply again for execution of the decree under Rr. 35 and 36, ante[1] or he may institute a regular suit for possession against the persons obstructing if they are third parties.[1-a]

But if an auction-purchaser is resisted or obstructed in the delivery of possession and he does not apply for an investigation under this rule within the period prescribed (30 days), is it open to him to apply again under Rr. 95 or 96, and if, again resisted, to apply under this rule? If the first resistance was by the judgment-debtor or by any person on his behalf, there is nothing to prevent the purchaser from applying again for delivery of possession under R. 95, within the period of limitation prescribed and the resistance, offered afresh will furnish a fresh cause of action for proceeding under this rule.[2] But if the original obstruction was by third parties and not by the judgment-debtor or any person claiming through him, it has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that a second application for delivery of possession under R. 95, is not maintainable.[3] See Note 5, infra.

5. Remedies of a person obstructed.—See Note 3, ante.

It is not obligatory on the decree-holder or auction-purchaser to resort to the summary remedy provided under this rule.[1] (See Notes 3 and 4, ante.) But if he applies under this rule and an order is made on investigation against him, i.e., under R. 99, infra, his remedy is only to file a suit under R. 103 within one year from the date of the order to establish his right to the property. The following tabular statement still illustrate the various remedies open to the person obstructed:—

Remedies of a Person Obstructed.

I. Holder of a decree for possession.	a. On obstruction by judgment-debtor or by person claiming under him.	i. May proceed under Rule 97. ii. May apply again in execution of the decree under Rules 35, 36, ante and if obstructed again may apply under Rule 97.

5. "Is still resisted or obstructed."
6. "In obtaining possession"—Meaning of.

1. Scope and applicability of the rule.—In order that this rule might apply, the resistance or obstruction must be without just cause and must be by either the judgment-debtor or by some other person at his instigation. No order under this rule can therefore be passed against a person, not the judgment-debtor, unless his resistance was at the instigation of the judgment-debtor,[1] or against a person who was in possession on his own account though his resistance was at the instigation of the judgment-debtor[2] inasmuch as, in such case, his obstruction cannot be said to be without just cause.

By virtue of S. 146, ante an application under this rule can be maintained against any person claiming under the judgment-debtor and bound by the decree such as a tenant[3] or a transferee pendente lite,[4] or a subsequent purchaser from the judgment-debtor in execution of a money decree against him.[5] The Court can pass an order under this rule only on an application made to it under R. 97, ante, and cannot therefore pass an order under this rule on an application for possession under R. 95, ante.[6]

2. Presidency Small Cause Court.—Under S. 48 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure are made applicable to proceedings under Chapter VII of the Act, and, therefore, the Small Cause Court has power to direct removal of improper obstruction on the part of the judgment-debtor under this rule.[1]

3. Alienee from judgment-debtor pending attachment.—Under R. 95, ante the Court may order delivery of possession against a person "claiming under a title created by the judgment-debtor subsequently to the attachment of such property.'' It has been held by the High Court of Madras that this rule should be read along with R. 95, and an order can be made under this rule against such a person, and further that such person is a representative of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of S. 146, ante.[1] See Note 1, ante and also Note 2 to R. 102.

4. ''Just cause''.—This rule applies only to cases where the judgment-debtor or any person at his instigation resists delivery of possession without any just cause,[1] and therefore if the auction-purchaser sells the property to one of the judgment-debtors and he resists delivery of possession, the Court cannot order delivery of possession under this rule.[2] But the Court ought to decide the question of the existence or otherwise of just cause, on the evidence before it and not on a consideration that has no basis at all.[3]

5. ''Is still resisted or obstructed''.—If the judgment-debtor or any person acting at his instigation, again resists delivery of possession after an order for delivery is passed under this rule, the Court has the power to commit such person to prison, on an application by the person obstructed.

6. ''In obtaining possession''—Meaning of.—The word ''possession'' in this rule is not restricted to actual or physical possession but includes also constructive possession or possession in law by receipt of rent or otherwise.[1]

1. Procedure under the old Code.—This rule corresponds to Ss. 331 and 335 of the Code of 1882. S. 331 related to the procedure to be adopted in the case of obstruction to delivery of possession to the holder of a decree for possession, and S. 335 related to the case of obstruction to auction-purchaser.

Under S. 331, however, the Court had to register the application as a suit between the decree-holder as plaintiff, and the claimant as defendant, and to investigate into the claim as if a suit for the property had been instituted by the decree-holder against the claimant. The following cases which were decided under the old Code are no longer of any importance.[1]

O.21, R.99, Notes 2—5.

2. Scope of the rule.—When delivery of property in execution of a decree is resisted, the Court can only deal with the matter on application to remove the obstruction, and only in the manner provided by law. It cannot direct that unless the obstructor filed a suit within a certain time to establish his right, his title to the property should cease.[1] The order passed under this rule is final subject to the result of the suit, if any, under R. 103, infra.[2]

3. "Person other than the judgment-debtor."—See Note 2 to R. 100, infra.

4. "Claiming in good faith to be in possession".—The word possession in this rule is not restricted to actual possession; it includes also constructive possession.[1] See Note 6 to R. 98, ante.

The party resisting delivery of possession should satisfy the Court that he is, in good faith, in possession of the property on his own account or on account of a person not the judgment-debtor.[2] If the obstructor has a good and legal right to obstruct, the fact that he acts at the instigation of the judgment-debtor will not prevent an order being made under this rule in his favour.[3] It has also been held in the undermentioned case,[4] that the words "claiming in good faith to be in possession" do not mean "claiming in good faith to have a right to be in possession but mean only that the claimant claims to be in possession as a matter of fact. See R. 101, infra.

5. "On his own account."—The person in possession, resisting delivery of possession may claim to be in possession on his own account, or as tenant of, or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor. Therefore, in execution of a decree against a tenant, a tenant of the tenant, i.e. a sub-tenant cannot resist delivery of possession to the landlord.[1] The Calcutta High Court has held that if the lessee granted the sub-lease against a covenant in the lease not to sub-let, the sub-lessee is a trespasser and therefore is a person claiming to be in possession on his own account and that the remedy of the landlord is to file a suit for possession against the sub-lessee.[2] See Note 2 to R. 101, infra.

possession of the property.[1-a] The Court cannot, however, act under this rule unless there is an application of the party dispossessed.[1-b]

Where an application is made under this rule, the Court should register the application,[2] make an investigation therein and should either dismiss the application or pass an order under R. 101, infra.[3] It has no jurisdiction to pass a declaratory order under this rule.[4] As to the scope of the investigation under this rule, see R. 101, infra.

The remedy of the party against whom an order is made under R. 101 is to file a suit under R. 103 to establish his right to the possession of the property.

A third person dispossessed in execution of a decree under S. 9 of the Specific Relief Act can also apply under this rule.[5]

2. "Any person other than the judgment-debtor".—This rule has to be read along with R. 101, infra. A judgment-debtor or his representative cannot apply under this rule.[1] As to who are "representatives" see the case cited below[2] and S. 47, Notes 17 and 21, ante. The Calcutta High Court[3] has, however, held that the word "judgment-debtor" in this rule does not include any person other than the actual judgment-debtor; the question according to that Court, is not whether the applicant is a representative of the judgment-debtor but if, he is in possession on his own account, and this should be investigated under R. 101. See R. 101, infra.

A person who is a party to the suit, but against whom no decree has been passed, is not a judgment-debtor and therefore, can apply under this rule.[4] If, however, the decree is binding on him his remedy is to apply under S. 47.[5]

O. 21, R. 100. Notes 2—5.

Rr. 100 and 101 are not exhaustive and do not include a case where the judgment-debtor himself is in possession on account of some third person and not on his own account. It has been held, however, that in such a case the third person is entitled to apply under this rule if the judgment-debtor is dispossessed by the decree-holder or auction-purchaser.[6]

Where the judgment-debtor or his representative is dispossessed of property not included in the decree, his remedy is to apply under S. 47, ante.[7]

3. "Is dispossessed".—Unless the applicant is dispossessed of the property, he has no cause of action to apply under this rule.[1] The dispossession should be in the course of the delivery of possession[2] and should be proved as a fact.[3] Thus, mere delivery of symbolical possession to the decree-holder or auction-purchaser will not amount to dispossession of the party in possession; it must be shown that the applicant was actually dispossessed of the property.[4]

Where the dispossession does not take place in the course of the delivery of possession in execution but subsequent thereto, this rule has no application, and the remedy of the party aggrieved, is to file a regular suit for possession.[5]

Where a person is in possession of the property by receipt of rent or otherwise, and the tenant in actual possession is dispossessed of the property by the decree-holder or auction-purchaser, the landlord is a person who is dispossessed of the property within the meaning of this rule[6], even though the tenant is the judgment-debtor.[7] See Note 2, ante.

4. Dispossession under order of Collector.—This rule has no application to a case where the decree has been transferred to the Collector for execution under powers conferred on him by the Local Government under S. 70 of the Code. The Court which passed the decree is for the time being functus officio, and has no jurisdiction to inquire into a complaint of dispossession under this rule;[1] but as soon as the Collector has exhausted all the powers conferred upon him, the Civil Court has jurisdiction to inquire into any matters requiring to be done in execution such as those provided in Rr. 97 to 103 of the Code.[2]

1. Procedure under the old Code.—Rules 100 and 101 correspond to Ss. 332 and 335 of the Code of 1882. Section 332 related to the procedure to be adopted in the case of a person dispossessed by the holder of a decree, for possession, and S. 335 related to the case of dispossession by the auction-purchaser. But under S. 332, the Court had to examine the applicant, and on being satisfied that there was probable cause for making the application, had to ascertain on investigation if the following grounds existed:—Viz.,

(i) Whether the property was bona fide in the possession of the applicant on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor.

(ii) Whether the property was not comprised in the decree, and

(iii) If the property was comprised in the decree, whether the applicant was not a party to the suit in which the decree was passed.

If the Court was satisfied that these grounds existed it had to order re-delivery of the property to the applicant.—otherwise it had to dismiss the application.

As to the nature of the investigation under this rule. See Note 5, infra.

2. "On his own account".—Rules 100 and 101 are not confined, in their application, to cases of exclusive possession, but are applicable also to cases where the person dispossessed was in joint possession.[1] Therefore, if a co-owner or a member of an undivided family is dispossessed in execution of a decree against another co-owner or co-parcener, he may apply under this rule to be put in joint possession with the decree-holder or the auction-purchaser,[2] but he cannot claim to be put in possession of specific portions of the property, as the Court cannot adjudicate on such questions of title under this rule.[3]

A mortgagee in possession of the property[4] or occupancy tenants,[5] if dispossessed can get back the possession under this rule as they are in possession on their own account, but not a mortgagee or transferee pendente lite. See R. 102, infra. It has been held by the High Court of Patna that an usufructuary mortgagee was not entitled to object under O. 21, R. 58 to the attachment of the property of his mortgagor, and that if such an objection is made and disallowed, R. 63 would not operate to debar him from making an application under this rule when he is dispossessed by the purchaser in execution of a decree.[6] It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta[7] that if the claimant was in possession on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor, he is entitled to succeed under this rule, though he is a trespasser or has no title to the property.

The Court is not entitled on an application under this rule to investigate into the question of benami in order to determine whether the applicant was in possession of the property on his own account.[8]

Nature of the investigation under this rule.—Where a third party applies for re-delivery of property under this rule the question which the Court has to decide is whether the applicant was in possession on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor.[1] It cannot reject the application on the ground that originally the applicant had not obtained possession in a lawful manner.[2] The applicant has to prove that he was in possession and was dispossessed in the course of the delivery of possession to the decree-holder or purchaser[3] (see Notes 2 and 3 to R. 100, ante), the onus lies upon him to prove his right to possession,[4] and it is a serious irregularity to ask the decree-holder or auction-purchaser to begin.[5] The investigation under this rule being a summary one, the Court should confine itself to the question of possession and should not decide questions of title[6] or questions regarding the construction of the decree[7] or the equities of the parties.[8] An unsuccessful applicant under O. 21, R. 58 is not competent to apply under O. 21, R. 100 inasmuch as the order against him will be conclusive against him until a suit is instituted to set aside the order under O. 21, R. 63.[9]

6. Applicability of the provisions of O. 9 to proceedings under this rule.—See S. 141, Note 2, ante and O. 9, R. 1, ante, Note 1. If the application under R. 100 is dismissed for default or ordered ex parte, it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that the Court may restore the application or set aside the ex parte order, as the case may be, under its inherent powers.[1]

7. Appeal.—If the proceedings relating to delivery of possession under Rr. 97—102 are "between the parties or their representatives", an order passed in such proceedings will fall under S. 47 according to the view of the High Courts of Calcutta and Madras and of the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind. See Note 19 to S. 47, ante, An order under R. 98 against a stranger will not fall under S. 47 even according to this view and no appeal will, therefore, lie in such a case.[1] But if the proceedings under this rule are between parties to the suit, and an order is passed under this rule, the High Court of Madras has held[2] that the aggrieved party will have only a right of appeal under S. 47, ante. In the undermentioned case Mr. Justice Odgers observed as follows:—"It was not open to the plaintiffs to proceed at their option, either by a suit or by way of appeal. It is also to be observed that S. 47 expressly bars a suit in contradistinction to R. 103, which says that the order on obstruction proceedings shall be conclusive subject to the result of the suit if any. It has, as far as

8. Revision.—As the remedy of the party against whom an order under Rr. 98, 99 or 101 has been passed is to file a suit under R. 103, infra. Ordinarily orders passed under these rules are not open to revision.[1] But if the lower Court refused to order investigation[2] or rejected the application on a misconstruction of the law[3] or the lower appellate Court erroneously entertained appeals from orders under those rules[4] or if there are illegalities or material errors in the proceedings in the lower Court[5] the High Court may interfere in revision.

Synopsis.

1 Scope of the rule. 2. Transferee pendente lite.

1. Scope of the rule.—This rule enacts that a transferee pendente lite cannot get the benefit of the procedure under Rr. 99 and 101.[1] But such a person can raise all the objections that the judgment-debtor could have raised in execution.[2] A transferee pendente lite who pays off a prior usufructuary mortgagee and enters into possession of the property, must, however, be considered as standing in the shoes of the usufructuary mortgagee himself and not as being a transferee pendente lite under this rule.[3]

O. 21, R. 102, Note 2.

2. Transferee pendente lite.—This rule specifically deals with cases of a "decree for possession of immoveable property." It does not deal with decrees for money in which property has been attached in execution and the judgment-debtor has, during such attachment, transferred his properties. It has been held in the cases cited below that the principle of this rule will apply to such cases also.[1]

See also Note 21 to S. 47 and also Note 3 to R. 98.

O. 21, R. 103.

R. 103. [Ss. 332, 335.] Any party not being a judgment-debtor against whom an order is made under rule 98, rule 99 or rule 101 may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property; but, subject to the result of such suit (if any), the order shall be conclusive.

Orders conclusive subject to regular suit.

Local Amendments.

ALLAHABAD.

The following rules shall be added to Order 21:—

104. When the certificate prescribed by S. 41 is received by the Court which sent the decree for execution, it shall cause the necessary details as to the result of execution to be entered in its register of civil suits before the papers are transmitted to the record-room.

105. Every attachment of moveable property under Rule 43, of Negotiable Instruments under Rule 51, and of immoveable property under Rule 54, shall be made through a Civil Court Amin, or bailiff, unless special reasons render it necessary that any other agency should be employed; in which case those reasons shall be stated in the handwriting of the presiding Judge himself in the order for attachment.

106. When the property which it is sought to bring to sale is immoveable property within the definition of the same contained in the law for the time being in force relating to the registration of documents, the decree-holder shall file with his application a certificate from the Sub-Registrar within whose sub-district such property is situated, showing that the Sub-Registrar has searched his book Nos. I and II and their indices for the past twelve years and stating the encumbrances, if any, which he has found on the property.

107. Where an application is made for the sale of land or of any interest in land, the Court shall before ordering sale thereof, call upon the parties to state whether such land is or is not ancestral land within the meaning of Notification No. 1887-I—238-10, dated 7th October, 1911, of the Local Government, and shall fix a date for determining the said question.

On the day so fixed, or on any date to which the enquiry may have been adjourned, the Court may take such evidence, by affidavit or otherwise, as it may deem necessary and may also call for a report from the Collector of the district as to whether such land or any portion thereof is ancestral land.

Note 2.

(1) Kuppanna Kavundan v. Kumara Kavundan, (1910) 7 Ind Cas 418 (419): 34 Mad 450: 20 Mad L Jour 961: 8 Mad L Tim 240: 1910 Mad W N 574. See also Sivarama Sastrigal v. Somasundara Mudali, (1905) 28 Mad 119 (122). See also Note 21 to S 47.

After considering the evidence and the report, if any, the Court shall determine whether such land, or any, and what part of it, is ancestral land. O. 21, R. 103.

The result of the enquiry shall be noted in an order made for the purpose by the presiding Judge in his own handwriting.

108. When the property which it is sought to bring to sale is revenue paying or revenue free land or any interest in such land, and the decree is not sent to the Collector for execution under S. 68, the Court, before ordering sale, shall also call upon the Collector in whose district such property is situate to report whether the property is subject to any (and, if so, to what) outstanding claims on the part of Government.

109. The certificate of the Sub-Registrar and the report of the Collector shall be open to the inspection of the parties or their pleaders, free of charge, between the time of the receipt by the Court and the declaration of the result of the enquiry.

No fees are payable in respect of the report by the Collector.

110. The result of the enquiry under Rule 66 shall be noted in an order made for the purpose by the presiding Judge in his own handwriting. The Court may in its direction adjourn the enquiry, provided that the reasons for the adjournment are stated in writing and that no more adjournments are made than are necessary for the purposes of the inquiry.

111. If after proclamation of the intended sale has been made any matter is brought to the notice of the Court which it considers material for purchasers to know, the Court shall cause the same to be notified to intending purchasers when the property is put up for sale.

112. The costs of the proceedings under Rules 66, 106 and 108 shall be paid in the first instance by the decree-holder, but they shall be charged as part of the costs of the execution, unless the Court, for reasons to be specified in writing, shall consider that they shall either wholly or in part be omitted therefrom.

113. Whenever any Civil Court has sold, in execution of a decree or other order, any house or other building situated within the limits of a military cantonment or station, it shall, as soon as the sale has been confirmed, forward to the Commanding Officer of such cantonment or station for his information and for record in the Brigade or other proper office, a written notice that such sale has taken place; and such notice shall contain full particulars of the property sold and of the name and address of the purchaser.

114. Whenever guns or other arms in respect of which licenses have to be taken by purchasers under the Indian Arms Act (Act No. XI of 1878) are sold by public auction in execution of decrees by order of a Civil Court, the Court directing the sale shall give due notice to the Magistrate of the district of the names and addresses of the purchasers, and of the time and place of the intended delivery to the purchasers of such arms, so that proper steps may be taken by the police to enforce the requirements of the Indian Arms Act.

115. When an application is made for the attachment of live-stock or other moveable property, the decree-holder shall pay into Court in cash such sum as will cover the costs of the maintenance and custody of the property for fifteen days. If within three clear days before the expiry of any such period of fifteen days the amount of such costs for such further period as the Court may direct be not paid into Court, the Court, on receiving a report thereof from the proper officer, may issue an order for the withdrawal of the attachment and direct by whom the costs of the attachment are to be paid.

O. 21, R. 103.

116. Live-stock which has been attached in execution of a decree shall ordinarily be left at the place where the attachment is made either in custody of the judgment-debtor on his furnishing security, or in that of some landholder or other respectable person willing to undertake the responsibility of its custody and to produce it when required by the Court.

117. If the custody of live-stock cannot be provided for in the manner described in the last preceding rule, the animals attached shall be removed to the nearest pound established under the Cattle Trespass Act, 1871, and committed to the custody of the pound-keeper who shall enter in a register:—

(a) the number and description of the animals;

(b) the day and hour on and at which they were committed to his custody.

(c) the name of the attaching officer or his subordinate by whom they were committed to his custody; and shall give such attaching officer or subordinate a copy of the entry.

118. For every animal committed to the custody of the pound-keeper as aforesaid, a charge shall be levied as rent for the use of the pound for each fifteen or part of fifteen days during which such custody continues, according to the scale prescribed under S. 12 of Act No. I of 1871.

And the sums so levied shall be sent to the Treasury for credit to the Municipal or District Board, as the case may be, under whose jurisdiction the pound is. All such sums shall be applied in the same manner as fines levied under S. 12 of the said Cattle Trespass Act.

119. The pound-keeper shall take charge of, feed and water, animals attached and committed as aforesaid until they are withdrawn from his custody as hereinafter provided and he shall be entitled to be paid for their maintenance at such rates as may be, from time to time prescribed under proper authority. Such rates shall, for animals specified in the section mentioned in the last preceding rule, not exceed the rates for the time being fixed under S. 5 of the same Act. In any case, for special reasons to be recorded in writing, the Court may require payment to be made for maintenance at higher rates than those prescribed.

120. The charges herein authorized for the maintenance of the live-stock shall be paid to the pound-keeper by the attaching officer for the first fifteen days at the time the animals are committed to his custody, and hereafter for such further period as the Court may direct, at the commencement of such period. Payments for such maintenance so made in excess of the sum due for the number of days during which the animals may be in the custody of the pound-keeper shall be refunded by him to the attaching officer.

121. Animals attached and committed as aforesaid shall not be released from custody by the pound-keeper except on the written order of the Court or of the attaching officer, or of the officer appointed to conduct the sale; the person receiving the animals, on their being so released, shall sign a receipt for them in the register mentioned in Rule 118.

122. For the safe custody of moveable property other than live-stock while under attachment, the attaching officer shall, subject to approval by the Court, make such arrangements as may be most convenient and economical.

123. With the permission of the Court the attaching officer may place one or more persons in special charge of such property.

124. The fee for the services of each such person shall be payable in the manner prescribed in Rule 116. It shall not be less than four annas and shall ordinarily not be more than six annas per diem. The Court may at its discretion allow a higher fee; but if it do so, it shall state in writing its reasons for allowing an exceptional rate. O. 21, R. 103.

125. When the services of such person are no longer required the attaching officer shall give him a certificate on a counterfoil form of the number of days he has served and of the amount due to him; and on the presentation of such certificate to the Court which ordered the attachment the amount shall be paid to him in the presence of the presiding Judge.

Provided that where the amount does not exceed Rs. 5, it may be paid to the Sahna by money order on requisition by the Amin, and the presentation of the certificate may be dispensed with.

126. When in consequence of an order of attachment being withdrawn or for some other reason, the person has not been employed or has remained in charge of the property for a shorter time than that for which payment has been made in respect of his services, the fee paid shall be refunded in whole or in part, as the case may be.

127. Fees paid into Court under the foregoing rules shall be entered in the Register of Petty Receipts and Repayments.

128. When any sum levied under Rule 119 is remitted to the treasury, it shall be accompanied by an order in triplicate (in the form given as Form 9 of the Municipal Account Code), of which one part will be forwarded by the Treasury Officials to the District or Municipal Board, as the case may be. A note that the same has been paid into the Treasury as rent for the use of the pound, will be recorded on the extract from the pass book.

129. The cost of preparing attached property for sale, or of conveying it to the place where it is to be kept or sold, shall be payable by the decree-holder to the attaching officer. In the event of the decree-holder failing to provide the necessary funds, the attaching officer shall report his default to the Court, and the Court may thereupon issue an order for the withdrawal of the attachment and direct by whom the costs of the attachment are to be paid.

130. Nothing in these rules shall be deemed to prevent the Court from issuing and serving on the judgment-debtor simultaneously the notice required by O. 21, Rr. 22, 66, 107.

GARNISHEE ORDERS.

131. The Court may, in the case of any debt due to the judgment-debtor (other than a debt secured by a mortgage or a charge or a negotiable instrument, or a debt recoverable only in a Revenue Court), or any moveable property not in the possession of the judgment-debtor, issue a notice to any person (hereinafter called the garnishee) liable to pay such debt, or to deliver or account for such moveable property, calling upon him to appear before the Court and show cause why he should not pay or deliver into Court the debt due from or the property deliverable by him to such judgment-debtor, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to satisfy the decree and the cost of the execution.

132. If the garnishee does not forthwith or within such time as the Court may allow, pay or deliver into Court the amount due from or the property deliverable by him to the judgment-debtor, or so much as may be sufficient to satisfy the decree and the cost of execution, and does not dispute his liability to pay such debt or deliver such moveable property, or if he does not appear in answer to the notice, then the Court may order the garnishee to comply with the terms of such notice, and on such order execution may issue as though such order were a decree against him.

O. 21, R. 103.

133. If the garnishee disputes his liability the Court, instead of making such order, may order that any issue or question necessary for determining his liability be tried as though it were an issue in a suit; and upon the determination of such issue shall pass such order upon the notice as shall be just.

134. Whenever in any proceedings under these rules it is alleged, or appears to the Court to be probable that the debt or property attached or sought to be attached belongs to some third person or that any third person has a lien or charge upon, or an interest in it, the Court may order such third person to appear and state the nature of his claim, if any, upon such debt or property and prove the same, if necessary.

135. After hearing such third person, and any other person who may subsequently be ordered to appear, or in the case of such third or other person not appearing when ordered, the Court may pass such order as is hereinbefore provided or make such other order as it shall think fit, upon such terms in all cases with respect to the lien, charge or interest, if any, of such third or other person as to such Court shall seem just and reasonable.

136. Payment or delivery made by the garnishee whether in execution of an order under these rules or otherwise shall be a valid discharge to him as against the judgment-debtor, or any other person ordered to appear as aforesaid, for the amount paid, delivered or realised although such order or the judgment may be set-aside or reversed.

137. Debts owing from a firm carrying on business within the jurisdiction of the Court may be attached under these rules, although one or more members of such firm may be resident out of the jurisdiction: Provided that any person having the control or management of the partnership business or any member of the firm within the jurisdiction is served with the garnishee order. An appearance by any member pursuant to an order shall be a sufficient appearance by the firm.

138. The costs of any application under these rules and of any proceedings arising therefrom or incidental thereto, or any order made thereon, shall be in the discretion of the Court.

139. (1) Where the liability of any garnishee has been tried and determined under these rules, the order shall have the same force and be subject to the same conditions as to appeal or otherwise as if it were a decree.

(2) Orders not covered by Cl. (1) shall be appealable as orders made in execution.

Illustration.—An application for a garnishee order is dismissed either on the ground that the debt is secured by a charge or that there is no prima facie evidence of debt due. This order is appealable as an order in execution.

140. All the rules in this Code relating to service upon either plaintiffs or defendants at the address filed or subsequently altered under O. 7 or O. 8 shall apply to all proceedings taken under O. 21 or S. 47.

The following Form shall be used under the provisions of R. 131 of O. 21:—

104. For the purpose of all proceedings under this order service on any party shall be deemed to be sufficient if effected at the address for service referred to in O. 8, R. 11, subject to the provisions of O. 7, R. 24, provided that this rule shall not apply to the notice prescribed by R. 22 of this order.

OUDH.

Add the following rules:—

"104. The Court may, in the case of any debt due to the judgment-debtor (other than a debt secured by a mortgage or a charge on a negotiable instrument, or a debt recoverable only in a Revenue Court), or any moveable property not in the possession of the judgment-debtor, issue a notice to any person (hereinafter called the garnishee) liable to pay such debt, or to deliver or account for such moveable property, calling upon him to appear before the Court and show cause why he should not pay or deliver into Court the debt due from or the property deliverable by him to such judgment-debtor, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to satisfy the decree and the cost of execution.

105. If the garnishee does not forthwith or within such time as the Court may allow, pay or deliver into Court the amount due from or the property deliverable by him to the judgment-debtor, or so much as may be sufficient to satisfy the decree and the cost of execution and does not dispute his liability to pay such debt or deliver such moveable property, or if he does not appear in answer to the notice, then the Court may order the garnishee to comply with the terms of such notice, and on such order execution may issue as though such order were a decree against him.

106. If the garnishee disputes his liability the Court, instead of making such order, may order that any issue or question necessary for determining his liability be tried as though it were an issue in a suit, and upon the determination of such issue shall pass such order upon the notice as shall be just.

107. Whenever in any proceedings under these rules it is alleged or appears to the Court to be probable, that the debt or property attached or sought to be attached belongs to some third person or that any third person has a lien or charge upon, or an interest in it, the Court may order such third person to appear and state the nature of his claim, if any, upon such debt or property and prove the same, if necessary.

108. After hearing such third person, and any other person who may subsequently be ordered to appear, or in the case of such third or other person not appearing when ordered the Court may pass such order as is hereinbefore provided or make such other order as it shall think fit, upon such terms in all

110. Debts owing from a firm carrying on business within the jurisdiction of the Court may be attached under these rules, although one or more members of such firm may be resident out of the jurisdiction:

Provided that any person having the control or management of the partnership business or any member of the firm within the jurisdiction is served with the garnishee order. An appearance by any member pursuant to an order shall be sufficient appearance by the firm.

Right to present possession. See Note 1.

1. Scope of the rule.—This rule declares that any party against whom an order is made under Rr. 98, 99 or 101 may institute a suit to establish his right to the present possession of the property.[1] The word "party" refers to a party to the petition, and not to the decree under execution.[1-a]

The right of suit under this rule is a statutory one, and the mere fact that a party has failed to prefer a claim under R. 58, ante will not debar him from maintaining a suit under this rule.[2] On the other hand, the failure to file a suit under this rule by a party against whom an order is made under the previous rules, will render the order under those rules conclusive against him and his representatives.[3] In this connection it will be useful to compare R. 63, ante with this rule. A suit under the former is instituted for the purpose of establishing the right which the plaintiff claims to the property in dispute, while a suit under this rule is for the purpose of establishing the right which he claims to the present possession of the property.[4] Such right to possession may be based on title even without showing that the plaintiff was in actual possession at the date of the order against him.[5] Another point of distinction between R. 63 and this rule is that while under the former even an order without investigation will be conclusive, such an order will not be conclusive under this rule.[6] The reason is that under R. 63, the party against whom any order is made should institute a suit under that rule whereas under this rule, only a party against whom an order is made under Rr. 98, 99 or 101 need institute a suit under this rule, and an order under Rr. 98, 99 or 101 can only be made "where the Court is satisfied, etc.," which can only be on an investigation of the question.[7]

Where an order becomes conclusive under this rule, it will bar a suit as well as a defence by the party against whom the order is passed or his representative.[8]

The provisions of Rr. 97 to 103 are of a restrictive nature and strict compliance with them is necessary. If, in a particular case, it is shown that the provisions of any of these rules have not been strictly complied with, the penal consequence of barring the right of suit, cannot legally flow therefrom.[8-a]

A suit instituted under this rule is not a continuation of the summary application, but an independent proceeding governed by the relevant provisions of the Code; it would lie in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction, the property in dispute is situate.[9] The onus of proving subsisting title is prima facie on the party who was out of possession[9-a] and it has been held that the mere fact that the other party has been driven to institute a suit under this rule cannot shift that burden on to that party.[10]

Where an auction-purchaser of an undivided share of a co-owner, gets delivery of possession in execution but, on objection by a party to the suit, re-delivery is ordered in his favour, and the auction-purchaser thereupon sues for partition of the share purchased by him. such a suit is not governed by either this rule or by Art. 11-A of the Limitation Act, inasmuch as the re-delivery proceedings fall within S. 47.[11]

2. Suit by decree-holder or auction-purchaser under a different right.—The cause of action for a suit under this rule is the adverse order passed under the Rr. 98, 99 or 101, ante. This rule does not therefore apply where the auction-purchaser or the claimant institutes a suit relating to the property in any other capacity or based on a cause of action different from the adverse order under the Rr. 98, 99 or 101, ante.[1]

O. 21, R. 103, Notes 2—3.

1. A purchased certain property in execution of a decree and took delivery of possession of the property through Court. B filed an application under R. 100, but the Court dismissed it on the ground that B was not dispossessed and had therefore no cause of action under R. 100. B was subsequently dispossessed, and he brought a suit for possession, alleging as the cause of action, the subsequent dispossession, more than one year after the date of the order under R. 100. It was held that the suit was not barred.[2]

2. In execution of a decree for possession A was obstructed by B, and an order under R. 98 was passed against B. B filed a suit to set aside the decree on the ground of fraud and for delivery of possession as a consequential relief. It was held that since the basis of the claim was distinct and different, and the possession claimed was not present possession but only by way of consequential relief, the suit was not barred.[3]

3. A dispossessed B in execution of a decree. B filed an application under R. 100 and the same was granted. Subsequently A became aware of the fact that the judgment-debtor, a tenant. of a non-transferable holding had transferred the holding to the defendants. He thereupon filed a suit in ejectment against the defendant in the capacity of a landlord. It was held that the suit was not barred and that the cause of action was not the loss of possession but the fact that the tenant had unlawfully transferred a non-transferable holding to the defendants.[4] Inasmuch as an order under Rr. 98, 99 or 101 is conclusive under this rule only so far as the present right to possession is concerned, this rule will not operate so as to bar a party against whom an order has been passed under those rules, from maintaining a suit for redemption of property[5] or for enforcing a mortgage lien over the property.[6]

3. "Any party against whom an order is made".—As has been observed in Note 1, ante, an order cannot be said to have been made against any party, within the meaning of this rule, unless it was made after investigation into the matter.[1] It is also necessary that the Court should have come to a definite conclusion on the matter under enquiry; if it declines to give any decision at all on the matter, it will not be conclusive so as to bar a suit instituted more than one year from the date of the order.[2] The mere fact, however, that the investigation is not a complete one will not detract from the conclusiveness of the order.[3] Nor, where an application has been rejected after investigation, will the mere fact that the Court refers the parties to a regular suit, detract from the conclusive character of the order.[4] It has been held in the following cases that there is no order against a party within the meaning of this rule:—

(1) Where the applicant withdraws his application and the Court makes an endorsement on the application that no investigation was made by reason of the withdrawal.[5]

(2) Where the application is dismissed for default of appearance[6] or for non-prosecution[7] without inquiry. But where the Court fixes a day for the enquiry and, on the plaintiff's failure to produce evidence in support of the case, dismisses the application in the presence of the parties, it cannot be said to be a dismissal for default without inquiry.[8]

(3) Where the application of the claimant is allowed for default of appearance of the decree-holder.[9]

(4) Where the application is simply dismissed without investigation.[10]

(5) Where the application is rejected on the ground that it has been filed beyond time.[11]

(6) Where the party was a minor and was not properly represented in the proceedings.[11-a]

Where A files an application and the same is decided against him, he cannot be said not to be a party "against whom an order has been passed" merely because he is a benamidar for another person.[12]

Although R. 101 speaks of an order directing the applicant to be put in possession of property, it has been held that an order dismissing an application under R. 100 to be put in possession, is nevertheless an order against the applicant under R. 101 for the purposes of this rule, and that the applicant would be bound to file a suit under this rule within one year from the date of the order.[13]

4. Order dismissing application under R. 95.—An order on an application under O. 21, R. 95 dismissing it on the ground that the person in possession was so on his own account and not on account of the judgment-debtor, is not an order under R. 99 dismissing an application complaining of resistance or dispossession, and this rule will not apply to such orders.[1] Nor will this rule apply where the decree-holder applying under R. 95 gets possession without any resistance on the part of any one and the party dispossessed is not bound to sue the auction-purchaser within one year under this rule.[2] O. 21, R. 103, Notes 4—6.

5. Limitation.—A suit under this rule is governed by Art. 11-A of the Limitation Act and should be brought within one year of the date of the order against the plaintiff.[1] It has been held in the undermentioned case that where an order against a person in possession has remained unexecuted, he is, in a suit against him for possession, not estopped from pleading that plaintiff has no title to the properties.[2] As has been seen in Note 3 above where an order is passed without investigation; or where a suit is filed on a cause of action other than that of dispossession or of resistance or obstruction to delivery of possession, this rule does not apply and consequently Art. 11-A of the Limitation Act also does not apply.[3]

In computing the period of one year prescribed by Art. 11-A, the time taken in revision proceedings cannot be excluded under S. 14 of the Limitation Act.[4]

6. Court-fee.—A plaint in a suit under this rule is chargeable with a fixed fee under Art. 17 of Sch. II of the Court-Fees Act, 1870.[1]

O. 21, R. 106 (Allahabad).

The omission to file a certificate as required by this rule will not entitle the decree-holder to have process issued on his application,—but the application, if it satisfies the requirements of R. 11, ante, will not on that account, cease to be one in accordance with law and cannot, therefore, be dismissed.[1]

O. 21, R. 110 (Allahabad).

It is necessary that the result of the enquiry under O. 21, R. 66, should be drawn up by the Judge in his own handwriting.[1]

Order 22.

O. 22. General.

General.

Synopsis.

1. Survey of the order. 2. Applicability of the order.

1. Survey of the order.—This order deals with the creation, assignment or devolution of interest during the pendency of suits. Such creation, assignment or devolution may be brought about by:—

(i) The death of a party (Rr. 1 to 6);

(ii) His marriage (R. 7);

(iii) His insolvency (R. 8); or

(iv) other circumstances, such as transfer inter vivos, etc. (R. 10).

Death of a party.—If the suit is one in which the "right to sue" does not survive, the death puts an end to the suit. If, on the other hand, it is a suit in which the "right to sue" survives, the death will not put an end to the suit (R. 1). In the latter class of suits, viz., suits which are not put an end to on the death of a party, the following questions arise for consideration, viz.:—What is the procedure to be followed in such suits on such death? And what are the consequences of not following that procedure? The answer to the questions will depend upon (i) Who the party is that died: and (ii) to whom or against whom has the right survives. From these standpoints the following six alternative cases are possible:—

(1) One of two or more plaintiffs may die and the right to sue may survive to the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs alone.

(2) One of two or more defendants may die and the right to sue may survive against the surviving defendant or defendants alone.

(3) One of two or more plaintiffs may die and the right to sue may survive either to the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs along with third persons or exclusively to third persons.

(4) A sole plaintiff or sole surviving plaintiff may die in which case the right to sue must, if at all, survive to persons who are not plaintiffs.

Order 21, Rule 122 (Allahabad).
(1) Shakir Husain v. Chandoo Lal, 1931 All 567 (571, 573): 1931 All L J 865: 134 Ind Cas 836 (1926 All 406 overruled).

(5) One of two or more defendants may die and the right to sue may survive either against the surviving defendant or defendants along with third persons or, exclusively against third persons or

(6) A sole defendant or sole surviving defendant may die in which case the right to sue must, if at all, survive against persons who are not defendants.

O. 22, General Notes 1—2.

Rule 2 provides for the first two of the above alternatives. R. 3 applies to the third and fourth; and R. 4, to the fifth and sixth alternatives. R. 5 provides for determining the question as to who is the person to whom or against whom the right to sue survives, in case there should be a dispute about it. The provisions of Rr. 3 and 4 do not apply when the death occurs between the conclusion of the hearing of the suit and pronouncement of judgment in it (R. 6).

Marriage.—See R. 7.

Insolvency.—Rule 8, deals with the insolvency of a plaintiff. The insolvency of a defendant does not fall within R. 8, but comes under R. 10.

The effect of an abatement under the provisions of any of the previous rules is dealt with by R. 9; and sub-R. (2), thereof provides the remedy of the person aggrieved by the abatement. Other cases of creation, assignment and devolution are dealt with by R. 10. It will be noted that under this rule there is no abatement and even a substitution is within the discretion of the Court.

2. Applicability of the order.—The provisions of the order apply only to cases of creation, transfer or devolution of interest during the pendency of suit. Thus there can be no substitution of legal representatives under this order if the party had died before the institution of the suit.[1] Nor can the provisions of the order apply if the death occurs after the suit has been disposed of. Rule 6 is itself an illustration of this principle.

Applicability to appeals.—By virtue of R. 11 the provisions of this order apply to appeals. But in so applying them the following points should be noted:—

(i) Since an appeal is but a continuation of the suit, and the provisions of the order will apply even though the death may have occurred between the date of the lower Court's decree and that of the filing of the appeal (vide Notes under the several rules).

(ii) Though a suit on a personal action will abate on the death of a party during its pendency, yet if the suit is decreed, and, pending an appeal from the decree, the death occurs, the appeal will not abate. The reasons for this distinction have been discussed under Rr. 1, 3, 4 and 11.

Order 22 (General) Note 2.

(1) The Manager, Encumbered Estates v. Thurumal, 78 Ind Cas 569 (570) Sind.

O. 22, General Note 2.

The word "appeal" in R. 11, does not include appeals before the Privy Council; and the provisions of this order do not apply to such appeals. The reason is that judgments and orders of the Privy Council are, in effect, orders of the Sovereign and are of full force and effect despite the death of parties;[2] and Courts in India have no power to treat an order of the Sovereign as a nullity.[3] However, if a party dies after the grant of leave to appeal to the Privy Council and before the transmission of papers to England, the High Court can order substitution of legal representatives to avoid technical objections. But this power exists not by virtue of this order and there is no limitation of time for such substitution.[4]

Applicability to execution proceedings.—By virtue of R. 12, the provisions of Rr. 3, 4 and 8 of this order, do not apply to execution proceedings. But an appeal against an order made in execution proceedings is not itself a proceeding in execution of a decree or order and R. 12, will not apply thereto.[5]

Applicability to miscellaneous proceedings.—By virtue of S. 141 of the Code, the provisions of this order may be made applicable, whenever possible, to proceedings other than a suit or an appeal. For proceedings arising out of a reference to arbitration see the case noted below.[6] A conciliation proceeding under the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act (Bombay Act XVII of 1879) pending before a Sub-Judge has been held to be a proceeding in a Civil Court to which the provisions of this order are applicable.[7] But they have been held to be inapplicable to proceedings in a Mamlatdar's Court under the Mumlatdars Act (Bombay Act III of 1876) on the ground that the said Act provides for a summary procedure in certain matters and that by implication the elaborate procedure contained in the Code was not intended to be applied to such proceedings.[8]

Applicability to Revision proceedings.—This order and the theory of abatement contained therein do not apply to applications in revision. The reason is that in revision the High Court acts of its own motion and under its inherent jurisdiction to correct errors and irregularities committed by subordinate Courts; and though notice is usually given to all the parties interested and they are heard, it is not because any matter in dispute between the parties is sought to be adjudicated upon.[9]

Where an action, fails under this order, all reliefs or claims incidental to the action also fail. Thus if an appeal abates as regards an injunction

DEATH, MARRIAGE AND INSOLVENCY OF PARTIES.

1. Legislative changes:—

This rule corresponds to S. 361 of the old Code without any change except that the four illustrations which had been given under the old section have been omitted as being unnecessary.[1]

2. Scope of the rule.—Where, during the pendency of a suit, a party dies, the first question to be decided is whether the right to sue survives or not.[2] If it does not, there is an end of the suit. If it does, the suit can be continued, though the trial of the suit cannot be proceeded with immediately and without anything more. The reason is, that on the death of a party, the suit is in a state of suspens[2] and its trial cannot be taken up without following the procedure laid down in Rr. 2, 3 or 4 as the case may be.

This order is applicable to proceedings under the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act VI of 1908. See S. 265 (3) of that Act.

3. Right to sue—Meaning of.—The words "right to sue" must be interpreted to mean "right to seek relief".[1]

Illustrations.

1. A files a suit against B for damages. A dies during the pendency of the suit. Here A's right to sue, as to the survival of which a question might arise, is the right to claim damages from B which A had at the time of his death.

2. In the above suit suppose A gets a decree for damages and B appeals against the decree and during the pendency of the appeal B dies. Here B's "right to sue", about the survival of which a question might arise, is to have the decree of the Lower Court set aside, which is a very different thing from A's right to sue.[2]

3. Suppose in the above case B's appeal is allowed and A prefers a second appeal and during the pendency thereof A dies. Here A's "right to sue", about the survival of which a question might arise, is the right to have restored the benefit of the first Court's decree in his favour, and not his original right to claim damages against B.[3]

4. Suppose A's suit in the first Court is dismissed and A appeals and during the pendency thereof he dies, the right to sue will remain the same as the one on which he instituted the suit.[4]

In each of the above cases a person claiming that the right to sue of the deceased plaintiff or appellant has survived to him must show that he asserts the right to the same relief which the deceased plaintiff or appellant asserted at the time of his death.[5]

4. When right to sue survives.—The general rule is that all rights of action and all demands whatsoever existing in favour of or against a person at the time of his death survive to and against his representatives. For illustrations see the following cases.[1] There are however exceptions to this general rule. Rights intimately connected with the individuality of the deceased will not survive.[2] One aspect of this exception is expressed by the maxim actio personalis moritur cum persona—a personal right of action dies with the person. O. 22, R. 1; Notes 4—5.

The general rule and the exception abovementioned have also been recognised by the Legislature in the following enactments dealing with particular classes of cases and they may be carefully referred to as illustrating the principles applicable to the generality of cases.

(1) S. 37 of the Indian Contract Act lays down that "promises bind the legal representatives of the promisor in case of the death of such promisor before performance, unless a contrary intention appears from the contract." Such a contrary intention, will be presumed when the contract is of a nature involving special skill or personal confidence, etc.

(2) S. 306 of the Indian Succession Act provides that "All demands whatsoever, and all rights to prosecute or defend any action or special proceedings existing in favour of or against a person at the time of his decease, survive to and against his executors or administrators; except causes of action for defamation, assault as defined in the Indian Penal Code, or other personal injuries not causing the death of the party; and except also cases where, after the death of the party, the relief sought could not be enjoyed or granting it would be nugatory."

It is the original party's rights and disabilities that have to be considered and the mere fact that the legal representative could not, in his individual capacity, have brought a suit for the relief claimed does not cause abatement of the pending suit.[3]

5. Right to sue in personal actions.—In cases of personal actions, that is, in actions where the relief sought is personal to the deceased the "right to sue" will not survive to his representatives.[1] Thus a suit for damages for breach of a contract of betrothal (except to the extent of the actual expenses incurred when the betrothal was in force)[2] and a suit for dissolution of marriage together with the claim for damages against the co-respondent are suits involving claims of a personal nature which will not survive on the death of either party to his representative. A suit by a Hindu widow under the Dhayabhaga Law for partition in lieu of her maintenance will not survive on her death[4] but if, by an award or a compromise, a fixed sum has been awarded to her in lieu of her interest, a suit to recover the sum will be a suit to recover property and will survive to her legal representatives.[5] Similarly if what was once a personal claim has matured into a decree, the benefit of the decree will survive to the legal representatives.[6]

6. Suit to establish right to personal office.—A right to a personal office does not survive on the death of the claimant and a suit to establish such a right abates on the death of the plaintiff.[1] But if emoluments are attached to the office the right to sue will, on the principles mentioned in Note 4, ante, survive and the suit will not abate.[2]

7. Right to sue in respect of torts.—The maxim actio personalis moritur cum persona is, as a general rule, applicable to actions in respect of torts and, therefore, on the death of either party to such action, the right to sue will be extinguished.[1] Thus the maxim will apply to the following cases:—

(1) Suits for damages for injury to reputation such as defamation[3] malicious prosecution[3] malicious arrest[4] and malicious search.[5]

(2) Suits for damages for obstruction to plaintiff's right of way over defendant's land.[6]

(3) Suits for damages for illegal distraint for cess.[7]

(4) Suits for damages for refusal to deliver the Keys of a temple and to allow worship being performed.[8]

Where, however, the tort is one relating to or affecting the estate of the deceased, the maxim does not apply and the right to sue will survive to his representatives.[11] Thus it will survive where the tort committed has injured the estate of the deceased[12] or benefited the estate of the wrongdoer.[13] But the injury or the benefit must be the direct result of the wrong[14] and the damage caused by the injury must be liquidated and certain.[15]

8. Right to sue on contracts.—A right to sue in respect of a contract will, on the general principles referred to in Note 4, survive to the representatives of the promisee. Thus in a suit on a bond or to enforce specific performance of a contract to sell or recover property, if the plaintiff dies, the right to sue will survive to his legal representatives.[1] The right to sue will survive against the promisors representatives unless a contrary intention appears from the contract such as the contract being incapable of being performed by other persons than the deceased. See S. 37 of the Contract Act and the illustrations thereto.

9. Right to sue for pre-emption.—Rights of pre-emption are of two different kinds, viz:—

(1) Those incidental to the ownership of property; and

(2) Those which are purely personal.

Rights of the former kind will survive while those of the latter kind will not. In deciding therefor whether the right to sue, in pre-emption suits, survives or not, it is necessary to see whether the right claimed is one incidental to the ownership of property or only a personal right. The answer to this question will, in turn, depend upon the origin of the right. It may be founded on Muhammadan Law or on custom or it may have been given by Statute.

Pre-emption under Muhammadan Law.—Under the law applicable to the Sunni Muhammadans, the right of pre-emption does not survive on the death of the pre-emptor before decree.[1] Under the law applicable to the Shafies the right would appear to survive to the heirs of the pre-emptor on his death before decree.[2] Under the law applicable to other sects of Muhammadans there is a conflict of authority between the Allahabad and Bombay High Courts. The Allahabad High Court holds that the right in such cases is incidental to and arising out of ownership of land and that it therefore survives to the heirs of the pre-emptor though it cannot be transferred.[3] The same view prevails in the Punjab.[4] But according to the Bombay High Court the right is a personal one and does not survive to the heirs or other legal representatives of the pre-emptor[5] except in so far as it falls within the provisions of S. 306 of the Indian Succession Act.[6] In Madras where the principle of an absolute transfer of all rights under a sale prevails, a right of pre-emption is not recognised.[7] Except as a matter of custom in some places such as Malabar.[8]

Pre-emption under customary law.—Where the right claimed is one based on a custom, the question of its survival will have to be decided on evidence as to the custom.[9] Generally speaking a right of pre-emption based on Wazib-ul-arz is an incident of proprietary possession and will survive unless such survival is expressly excluded by local usage or other specific provisions.[10] In Bombay, however, even a customary right of pre-emption has been held to be a personal one.[11]

Pre-emption under Statute.—Where the right claimed is one conferred by statute, the question whether it survives or not will be governed by the provisions of the particular statute conferring the right. Thus under the Oudh Laws Act (Act XVIII of 1876) the right of pre-emption survives to the pre-emptor's heirs.[12] It can also be devised though not alienated to a stranger.[13]

O.22, R. 1, Notes 9—10.

10. Application for leave to sue in forma pauperis.—The right to apply for leave to sue in forma pauperis is purely a personal one depending upon the pauperism of the petitioner. On his death therefore the right does not survive.[1] Further, the legal representative may, or may not be a pauper.[2] If he is, he may file a fresh application in his own right.[3] If he is not, he has no right to sue in forma pauperis.[4]

Where the leave is granted, the plaint gets registered as a suit, and if the plaintiff dies thereafter, his legal representatives can no doubt continue the suit if the right to sue survives. He can further continue the suit as a pauper if he is himself a pauper.[5] If he is not a pauper, he should pay the Court-fee, otherwise the suit will be struck off.[6] This power to enquire into the pauperism of a legal representative is no doubt not contained in O. 22[7] but exists in a Court by virtue of its power to dispauper the original plaintiff himself at any stage of the suit. In making an order for or against the legal representatives, however, the Court should first see whether he is a legal representative in the capacity of an heir entitled personally or beneficially to the estate of the deceased or whether he is only coming in in a representative capacity having no personal or beneficial interest himself. In the former case, his own property can be taken into account.[8] In the latter case, only the estate of the deceased should be considered and not his individual property.[9]

If a respondent in an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis dies, there being no suit, O. 22 does not apply. Nor can Ss. 141 or 146 of the Code be invoked for imposing the penalties contained in O. 22, without express provision to that effect. Consequently, the legal representatives of the deceased respondent can be brought in at any time.[10] Vide also Notes under Rr. 3 and 4, infra.

11. Claim to guardianship.—An application under the Guardian and Wards Act (VIII of 1890) or otherwise for the appointment of a guardian for the person or property or both of a minor, is not a proceeding inter partes. It is the Court's duty to look after the interests of the minor and the parties simply set the Court in motion. The Policy of the law therefore is not to allow such applications to lapse by the death of parties.[1]

Where, however, the application is to enforce the applicant's personal right to guardianship the application will abate on the applicant's death.[2] Thus an application which was based on the petitioner's appointment in a testamentary disposition by the minor's father, was held to abate on the petitioner's death on the ground that the claim was a matter of personal preference and trust and would not therefore survive to the representatives of the petitioner.[3]

12. Right to letters of administration.—A right to the grant of letters of administration is a personal right and does not survive.[1] The heir can, however, apply afresh[2] where pending an application by an executor for the probate of a will, the executor dies, his widow cannot continue the application by asking for letters of administration instead.[3] The reason is that the right asserted by the alleged representative must be the same as that asserted by the deceased at the time of his death.

stances.[2] A suit relating to the estate by or against such limited owner is therefore not one on any cause of action personal to herself and if she dies pending such suit, the right to sue, will survive to the reversioners.[3] See also Note 63 to S. 11, and also Note 5 above. O.22, R.1, Notes 15—16.

Suit by or against reversioners.—A suit by or against a reversioner in respect of the estate of a Hindu widow is one brought or defended in a representative capacity and on behalf of all the reversioners.[4] Consequently, on the death, pending suit, of such reversioner, the next reversioner will be entitled to continue the suit or to defend it and there is no abatement.[5] Where, however, on the death of the reversioner, events happen, such as the death of the limited owner, which change the nature of the relief to be granted, there can be no continuation of the suit.[6]

Under certain statutes or customary law prevailing in certain places, the right to control or question the alienation made by a collateral is given to the person who will become immediately interested on the death of such collateral. A suit based on such a right can on the death of the plaintiff be continued by the person who becomes so interested on such death.[7] But where the right to question an alienation is, by law, given only to the descendants of the alienor, a suit by a descendant cannot be continued by collaterals other than those who can show themselves to be descendants of the person whose acts are questioned.[8]

16. Suit under Ss. 14 and 18 of the Religious Endowments Act.—A suit under S. 14 of the Religious Endowments Act (Act XX of 1863) is a representative suit and on the death of the plaintiff any one of the persons interested may get himself substituted and continue the suit without fresh leave.' But a suit under S. 14 of the Act against the defendant who is a sole surviving member of a committee for his removal for neglect of duty is purely a personal claim against the defendant and on the death of the latter the right to sue will not survive against his heir.[2]

17. Partial abatement.—An abatment may be total or partial. It may be partial either as regards the parties to the suit (Rr. 3 and 4) or as regards the subject-matter or reliefs.

The latter kind of partial abatement will arise where there are two or more reliefs claimed in the suit and on the death of a party the "right to sue" survives with respect to some of them and does not with respect to the others.

Illustrations.

1. A files a suit against B, a trustee, under S. 92 of the Code for the removal of B and for the settlement of a scheme pending the suit, B dies. The suit will abate as regards the former relief but may be continued as regards the latter.[1]
2. A files a suit against B, a trustee under S. 92 of the Code, for his removal and for setting aside an alienation of trust property by him to a stranger. Pending the suit B dies. The suit abates as regards the first relief but continues as regards the second.[2]

18. Death of either party pending appeal.—A "right to sue" which would have survived had the death of a party occurred during the pendency of a suit, will survive on such death taking place during the pendency of an appeal from the decree in the suit. (Vide Notes under R. 4, below).

In cases where it would not have so survived had the death occurred pending the suit, the question whether it survives or not if the death occurs pending appeal, will depend upon the result of the suit. If the suit has resulted in a decree in favour of the plaintiff's claim then the claim will have become perfected by the decree and attached to the estate. Thereafter it becomes a question of benefit to the estate, of the plaintiff which his legal representatives are entitled to uphold, or a detriment to the estate of the defendant which his legal representatives are entitled to try and get rid of; consequently the "right to sue" survives.[1] In such cases the fact that the lower Court's decree has already been executed will not affect the question, since the legal representative can get restitution if he succeeds.[2]

But if, in the first Court, the result was a dismissal of the suit, the plaintiff, in appealing against it is only seeking to enforce the very claim which he unsuccessfully sought to enforce in the suit. The appeal therefore, partakes of the character of the suit and the "right to sue" will not survive on the death of either party.[3] The appeal cannot be continued even in respect of costs or other relief which are merely incidental to the main relief.[4] If the first Court has decreed the suit in part then an appeal by the plaintiff in respect of the part disallowed will partake of the nature of an appeal from a dismissal of the suit.[5] O.22, R.1, Notes 18—19.

If the "right to sue" in an appeal does not survive then the memo. of cross-objections filed by the respondent cannot be heard and must also be dismissed.[6]

19. Suit or appeal against a dead person.—It has been seen in Note 2 to O. 22, ante (general) that this order applies only to cases of death during the pendency of the suit and not to cases of death occurring before the institution of the suit. A suit against a person who is dead at the time of the institution thereof is void and of no legal effect[1] and it is immaterial whether the death was known at the time or not.[2] Such a suit cannot be amended into one against his legal representatives.[3] But an appeal filed against a dead party can according to the High Court of Madras be amended by bringing in the legal representatives on the record.[4] According to the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court, however, the Court has no jurisdiction to bring in the legal representative, in such a case[5] although, if the legal representative is already on record in another capacity, the memorandum of appeal can be amended so as to describe him as the legal representative of the deceased.[5-a]

Where the legal representatives of a party dying subsequent to decree is allowed to file an appeal against the decree without notice to the respondent, the latter can, at the hearing raise the objection that the appellant is not really the legal representative and the appeal will be dismissed if there is no application to bring the right legal representative on record.[6]

20. No abatement by reason of death after decree.—When a suit is decreed, the decree determines and settles the claims of the parties. The claim is perfected by the judgment[1] and the decree is properly capable of transfer, devolution or inheritance like any other property.[2] Hence there is no abatement by death subsequent to the decree.[3] But this principle does not apply to the case of death after a decree dismissing a suit on a personal claim (vide Note 17, supra).

21. Appeal and Revision.—An order refusing an application to add a person as a legal representative and directing abatement of the suit on the ground that the right to sue does not survive, is appealable as a decree.[1]

An order adding or refusing to add a person as a legal representative of a deceased party may be open to revision under S. 115 of the Code.[2]

Synopsis.

1. Scope.
2. Right to sue surviving to surviving plaintiffs.
3. Right to sue surviving against surviving defendants.
4. "Suit" includes appeals.

O. 22, R. 2, Note 1.

1. Scope.—In order that this rule may apply it is necessary that

(1) There should be more than one plaintiff or more than one defendant in the suit: and

(2) on the death of one of the plaintiffs or one of the defendants, the right to sue should survive to the surviving plaintiffs alone or to the surviving defendants alone, respectively, even though they might have been on the record in another capacity.[1]

The word "survive" has not been used in any technical sense. It has been used in its ordinary sense of "outliving". This rule, therefore, applies to cases of every kind of devolution on death.[2] It is not necessary that the survival should be by reason of any circumstance antecedent to the suit.[3]

The word "alone" in the rule means "exclusively", i.e., to the exclusion of other persons.[4] It, however, does not mean that no one else should be entitled to sue or be liable to be sued: it only means that the survivor or survivors should be entitled to sue or be liable to be sued independently of others, i.e., without joining others.[5]

No application is necessary for making the necessary entry under this rule. It is the duty of the Court to do so.[6]

The following points of distinction between this rule and Rr. 3 and 4 may be noted:—

(i) There can be no abatement if the facts come within the provisions of this rule:[7] whereas if the facts fall within the provisions of Rr. 3 or 4 and the procedure laid down therein is not adopted the suit will abate.

(ii) If the conditions of this rule are satisfied the suit can be proceeded with even if it had been filed against a dead person along with others who are his legal representatives.[8] Whereas Rr. 3 and 4 will not apply if the party was dead at the time of institution of the suit.

2. Right to sue surviving to surviving plaintiffs.—Where the joint owners of land sue for damages for trespass on the land and pending the suit one of the plaintiffs dies the right to sue survives to the others.[1] Similarly where joint purchasers of property sue for possession and pending the suit one of them dies the right to sue will survive to the others if the purchase is joint and indivisible but not if it is of distinct though undivided shares.[2]

As to the survival of the right to sue on the death of a partner in suits by a firm see O. 30, R. 4: and as to the survival of such right on the death of plaintiff in a suit under S. 92, of the Code see S. 92, Note 30. See also the cases cited below.[3]

3. Right to sue surviving against surviving defendants.—Where the defendants are jointly and severally liable to the plaintiff, and one of them dies, his legal representatives need not be brought on record.[1] Thus in the following cases no legal representative of a deceased defendant need be brought on record:—

(1) Suit against several joint tort-feasors.[2]

(2) Suit against persons who have jointly kept the plaintiff out of possession.[3]

(3) Suit on a mortgage executed by the members of a joint Hindu family.[4]

The legal representatives of a defendant who has, before his death, assigned his rights to another defendant, need not be brought on record.[5]

1. Legislative changes.—

1. S. 363 of the old Code dealing with the case of death of one of several plaintiffs provided that the Court "may cause the legal representative" of the deceased plaintiff to be made a party: S. 365 which dealt with the death of a sole plaintiff provided that the legal representative may apply to be brought on the record and "the Court shall thereupon enter his name". Under the present rule "the Court, in all cases on an application made in that behalf, shall cause the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff to be made a party". See Note 7, infra.

2. The words "the Court may pass an order that the suit shall abate" which occurred in S. 366 of the old Code have been substituted by the words "the suit shall abate".

3. After the words "the suit shall abate" the words "so far as the deceased plaintiff is concerned" have been newly added in order to make it clear that the abatement shall, in the first instance, be only so far as the deceased plaintiff is concerned and not of the whole suit. See Notes 18 and 23, infra.

2. Scope and applicability of the rule.—In order that this rule may apply, the following conditions must be satisfied:—

1. The death must occur pending the suit. Thus the rule does not apply where a plaintiff dies after decree.[1]
2. The right to sue must survive to a "legal representative" as defined by S. 2, sub-S. (11).
3. The right to sue must survive either to other persons jointly with the surviving plaintiffs or to those other persons exclusively.[2]
4. The deceased plaintiff must have been a necessary party to the suit. Otherwise, or, if he has no interest in the suit, his legal representatives need not be made parties and the rule will not apply.[3]

The principle of the rule applies to proceedings in revision[4] and to cases before the Deputy Commissioner under the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act.[5] But it does not apply to proceedings in an application for probate.[6]

As to the applicability of the rule to appeals, see Note 3 below.

3. Rule applies to appeals.—The provisions of this rule apply also to appeals (vide R. 11, infra). Where an appellant dies during the pendency of the appeal and his right of appeal does not survive to the surviving appellant alone, his legal representatives can and should be brought on record;[1] and if no application therefor is made within the prescribed time the appeal will abate so far as the deceased appellant is concerned.[2]

Where two independent appeals were filed against the same decree, one by the plaintiff and the other by one of the defendants, and during the pendency of the appeals, the plaintiff died and his legal representatives were impleaded in his appeal but not in the defendant's appeal, it was held by the High Court of Madras that the latter appeal abated and that the impleading of the legal representative in the plaintiff's appeal would not enure for the benefit of the other appeal.[3]

In applying the rule to appeals the interpretation of the words "right to sue" explained in Note 3 to R. 1 ante should be remembered and it will follow that, even in cases where the suit would have abated by reason of the right to sue not surviving on the death of the plaintiff the right to appeal may survive.[4] See Note 3 to R. 1, ante.

4. Rule does not apply to execution proceedings.—The provisions of the rule do not apply to execution proceedings[1] (vide also R. 12) nor to appeals from orders passed in execution proceedings.[2]

Where, therefore, a decree-holder dies pending execution proceedings, the proper procedure to be followed is that laid down in S. 50 and O. 21, Rr. 16 and 22. But can the legal representative, in such a case, continue the pending execution proceedings or should he file a fresh application for execution? On this question there is a conflict of authority. The High Court of Calcutta considers that he cannot apply for substitution but should only file a fresh application.[3] According to a Full Bench of the High Court of Madras, he can continue the pending execution case and need not file any fresh application.[4]

5. Where right to sue survives to persons other than the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs alone.—This rule will apply only where the right to sue does not survive, where there are several plaintiffs, to the surviving plaintiffs alone[1] but survives either to the surviving plaintiffs jointly with others[2] or exclusively to others. If the right to sue survives exclusively to the surviving plaintiff alone the case is not within this rule[3] but is governed by the provisions of R. 2.

Where the right to sue survives to a contesting defendant, the rule cannot apply inasmuch as he cannot continue the suit against himself.[4] The case is, however, different if the defendant on whom the right to sue survives is only a pro-forma defendant.[5]

6. Death of a pauper applicant.—As already pointed out in Note 10 to R. 1, supra the right to apply for permission to sue in forma pauperis is a purely personal right which does not survive at all. On the death therefore of the petitioner in such an application, this rule will not apply.[1] See O. 22, R. 1, Note 10.

7. "On an application made in that behalf."—The Court cannot, under this rule, add a legal representative suo motu. An application must be made for the purpose under the old Code. Such an application had to be made by the legal representative or by a person claiming to be the legal representative.[1] This is not now necessary. The application can be made even by a defendant or respondent interested in bringing the legal representative on the record.[2] Where there are several legal representatives it is not necessary that the application need be made by all of them.[3] Further, even an application made by a person who is ultimately found not to be a legal representative has been held to be sufficient compliance with the requirements of the rule, if it has been made bona-fide.[4] But where A applies to be made a party as legal representative and the application states that B is not the legal representative, B cannot seek to counteract his own failure to apply in time by relying on A's application.[5] O. 22, R. 3, Notes 7—9.

Where a party dies after decree, his legal representative can file an appeal against the decree without making a separate application separately applying for impleading him as a party; the appeal itself may be regarded as an application for the purpose.[6]

8. Limitation therefor.—The period of limitation for filing an application to bring the legal representatives on record under this rule is 90 days from the date of the death under Art. 176 of the Limitation Act as amended by Act XXVI of 1920 and this is so even if the death had occurred before the amending Act was passed.[1]

The onus is on the applicant to prove that the application is within time.[2]

Where one of the legal representatives has applied in time to be made a party and the application has been granted, the other legal representatives may be brought on the record subsequently.[3] Further, the Court can, for sufficient cause, excuse the delay in filing the application.[4] (See also R. 9, infra.)

9. "Shall cause the legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff to be made a party."—The Court is bound to implead the legal representatives as parties on an application made in that behalf,[1] unless there is a dispute as to who is the legal representative, in which case, the question should be decided by it under R. 5.[2]

Where an application to add a person as the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff is filed, but the Court, without expressly adding the petitioner as a party allows him to prosecute the suit or appeal, the petitioner will be deemed to have been brought on the record.[3] But the same result will not follow by the mere fact that Vakalathnama is filed by a pleader on behalf of the legal representative.[4]

A Court to which a case has been sent on remand has jurisdiction to act under this rule.[5]

10. Legal representative.—The expression "legal representative" was not defined under the old Code. Under the English Law the primary meaning of the expression is "executor or administrator" though it may, under special circumstances be controlled by the context.[1] The same strict meaning was given to the expression in some cases under the old Code[2] while in other cases a wider meaning was given so as to cover all persons representing the estate of a deceased person.[3] The present definition in S. 2, sub-S. 11 of the Code is very wide[4] and gives effect to the latter view. Under that definition the following persons are legal representatives:—

1. A person who, in law, represents the estate of a deceased person.[5]

2. A person who intermeddles with the estate of a deceased.[6]

3. Where a party sues or is sued in a representative character, the person on whom the estate devolves on the death of the party so suing or sued.[7]

(1) Person who, in law, represents the estate of a deceased person.—There are certain cases which are governed by the Indian Succession Act, 1925, in which the executor or administrator alone can represent an estate of a deceased person.[8] In such cases they alone are his legal representatives.[9] In cases not governed by the Succession Act there may or may not be an executor or administrator. Where there is an executor or administrator he will be the legal representative of the deceased person; where the will is with regard to part of the property of the testator, the executor cannot be his legal representative with regard to the properties of the deceased not dealt with by the will.[10] Where there are no executors or administrators, the heir of the legatee will be the legal representative of the deceased person in respect of the property respectively got by them.[11] In other words, the term "legal representative", as defined in this Code only denotes those classes of persons on whom the status of a representative is fastened by reason of the death of a person whose estate they are held to represent.[12] But an assignee from the deceased of a certain property is not his legal representative, for he does not get any estate of the deceased by reason of his death.[13] Similarly the Crown getting, by escheat, the property of a person on his death is not a legal representative, as it does not get the estate as representing the deceased person but in its paramount right[14] so also a zamindar who, on the death of a tenant, gets under the village custom, his interest by escheat is not his legal representative.[15]

(2) Intermeddlers.—The term "intermeddle" has been used to mean an intermeddling with the assets of a deceased person in such a way as to denote an assumption of the authority, or an intention to exercise the functions of an executor or administrator.[16] In other words it has been used to mean what is kown as an executor de-son-tort.[17] It is therefore essential, in order to constitute a person an intermeddler that there should be an intention on his part to act as a legal representative and to represent the estate of the deceased.[18] A trespasser or a person who claims a title in himself adversly to the estate of the deceased, cannot, therefore, be an intermeddler within the meaning of the definition.[19] He will, however, be a legal representative if he intends to act as a legal representative and to represent the estate as such. It depends, in each case, upon the particular facts of that case whether he intends to do so.[20] An intermeddler is a legal representative only for the purposes of the procedure in instituting and defending suits, and only to the extent of the property with which he had intermeddled.[21]

(3) Representative suits.—In representative suits the legal representative must be a person on whom the estate devolves on the death of the party suing or sued. Where, on the death of a trustee, a new trustee is elected or appointed, the latter is not the legal representative of the deceased trustee, inasmuch as the estate did not devolve on him on the death of the former trustee, but by virtue of his appointment or election which has no retrospective operation.[22] In a suit by a Hindu widow for the benefit of the estate, the estate will devolve on the death of the plaintiff on the next reversioner who will therefore be the legal representative of the plaintiff.[23] In a suit by a reversioner in respect of an estate held by a Hindu female, the reversioner plaintiff sues on behalf of the whole reversionary body. In other words, all the reversioners are represented in the suit by the plaintiff reversioner, and on the latter's death, other reversioners may be brought on the record for the purpose of continuing the suit.[23-a] This, however, is not because the succeeding reversioners are legal representatives of the deceased reversioner (for there was no estate vested in him which devolved on his death to the succeeding reversioners), but under the provisions of O. 1, Rr. 8 and 10.[23-b] See Note 24 to O. 1, R. 8.

The right to enforce a partnership contract does not vest with the surviving partner alone.[24] But though the rights of a deceased partner may devolve on his representative, the right to sue survives to the surviving partners in the absence of any statutory authority to the contrary; the latter may therefore continue the suit as legal representatives of the deceased partner.[25] O. 22, R. 3, Notes 10—11.

It is not necessary that the legal representative should be in actual possession of the assets of the deceased. It is sufficient if he is entitled to the possession thereof, i.e., if he is a person on whom the estate would devolve.[26]

If A allows his benamidar to sue in his own name, he cannot, on the death of B, claim to come in as B's legal representative.[27] A District Judge taking possession of the assets of a deceased person under S. 64 of the Administrator-Generals Act II of 1874 is not the legal representative of the deceased.[28]

If a legal representative dies, his own legal representatives who have received assets of the previous deceased, will represent him.[29]

11. Two or more legal representatives.—The expression "legal representative" must, where there are more legal representatives than one, be read in the plural.[1] All the High Courts are agreed that, as a general rule, all the legal representatives should be brought on record and that if any of them refuse to join as plaintiffs or appellants they must be made defendants or respondents.[2] Where, however some of them are omitted to be brought on the record, there is a conflict of views as to whether the suit or appeal abates. According to the High Court of Allahabad[3] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind,[4] it does. According to the High Court of Calcutta "legal representative" means all the representatives of whom the representative applying, knew or ought to have known. Where one or more of the legal representatives are unknown or all unwilling to join in the application, a bona fide application by all the representatives who are willing to join, will be sufficient compliance with this rule.[5] The High Courts of Bombay[6] Lahore[7] and Madras[8] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur[9] hold that a bona fide application by all those representatives who are willing to join is enough and will save the suit or appeal from abatement. In cases where the legal representatives are added after notice to the defendants or respondents and they do not, raise any objection as to there being other legal representatives, even the Allahabad High Court agrees that it is not open to the defendants or respondents to subsequently contend that the suit or appeal has abated by reason of the fact that all the representatives were not brought on record.[10]

12. Wrong person as legal representative.—It is the duty of the defendant to enquire and ascertain who the legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff are.[1] Consequently an objection that any person is not the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff must be taken by them at the earliest possible opportunity and if no such objection is so taken and a person has been impleaded as the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff, it is not, afterwards, open to the defendants to subsequently contend that the true legal representatives have not been brought on record and that therefore the suit must abate.[2]

See Note 63 B to S. 11 and Ss. 50 and 52 and the undermentioned case.[3]

13. Joint Hindu family and legal representatives.—It has been held by the High Courts of Lahore[1] and Bombay[2] that where a co-parcener in a joint Hindu family dies, the survivors are not his legal representatives, inasmuch as they take the estate by survivorship and not by succession. The High Court of Patna has, on the other hand, held that they are the legal representatives within the meaning of S. 2, sub-S. 11 of the Code.[3]

Where, however, the deceased co-parcener was the managing member of the family representing the family, the succeeding managing member is, according to the High Court of Bombay[4] and Madras,[5] a "person who, in law, represents the estate of a deceased person" and is therefore his legal representative. The Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court has, on this point taken a contrary view.[6] According to the High Court of Calcutta, where the right to sue survives to, or against the surviving co-parceners, it is not necessary to bring the latter on the record as the legal representatives of the deceased co-parcener.[7]

In the case of a separated Hindu[8] or in a suit by a member of a joint Hindu family on a personal contract made with him, his heirs will be his legal representatives.[9] The institution of a suit for partition by an adult co-parcener effects a division in status. This principle, however, does not apply to a suit on behalf of a minor for partition. Where, in such a case, the minor dies before decree, his heirs are not entitled to continue the suit.[10] After a preliminary decree for partition even the minor plaintiff becomes a divided member, and, on his death, his heirs will be his legal representatives.[11]

14. Legal representatives of deceased plaintiff or appellant already on record in another capacity.—Where the legal representatives of a deceased plaintiff or appellant are already on the record, though in another capacity, an application to bring them in as legal representatives is unnecessary.[1] As whether such an application is necessary in the case of the death of a defendant or respondent, see Note 12 to R. 4, infra.

15. Determination of the question as to legal representative.—Where a dispute arises as to who is the legal representative, the Court should, under R. 5, determine the question.[1] The effect of such a determination is, however, only limited for the purposes of the suit and is not conclusive of his rights.[2]

16. What pleas may be taken by a legal representative.—When a party dies his legal representative is appointed merely in order that the suit might proceed and a decision arrived at. Only the rights and disabilities of the original parties that have to be considered and not those of the legal representatives themselves.[1] All that the representative can therefore do is to take up the suit at the stage at which it was left when the original plaintiff died, and to continue it.[2] He must rely on the same cause of action and on the same title as the deceased plaintiff.[3] It is not open to him to assert his own individual or hostile title in the suit.[4] Likewise the defendant is not entitled to raise against the legal representative any defence other than those which he could have raised against the deceased plaintiff.[5]

17. Minor as legal representative.—A minor is not disentitled to be made a party as the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff; but he must be represented by a next friend.[1]

18. "The suit shall abate so far as the deceased plaintiff is concerned".—If on the death of a plaintiff or appellant, no application to implead his legal representatives is filed within the prescribed time, the suit or appeal will abate.[1] But if such application has been made but rejected the suit or appeal will not abate.[2] It is immaterial that the application was made by a wrong person, if it was made bona fide.[3]

The impleading of the legal representative in an interlocutory matter in the suit will be enough to save the suit from abatement.[4] But the impleading of a legal representative in a cross-appeal will not save the appeal from abatement.[5]

Under the old section the Court had to pass an order that the suit or appeal abated. Under the present rule, however, the abatement takes place automatically and no separate order to that effect is necessary.[6] So that, any decree passed in the suit in disregard or in ignorance of an abatement will, to that extent, be set aside on appeal.[7]

An abatement under this rule will be only so far as the deceased plaintiff is concerned. If it is a case of death of a sole plaintiff the abatement will be of the entire suit.[8] If, on the other hand, it is a case of death of one of two or more plaintiffs the abatement will, in the first instance, be only so far as he is concerned.[9] The effect of such abatement on the whole suit or on the rights of the other parties will depend upon the nature of the suit and of the reliefs claimed (vide Note 23, infra). Apart from any such effect the abatement will be limited to the extent that the deceased plaintiff is concerned.[10]

O. 22, R. 3, Notes 18—23.

19. Death after preliminary and before final decree.—In suits requiring a preliminary and a final decree can there be an abatement on the ground that no application was filed in time to implead legal representatives on the death of a plaintiff or of a defendant after the preliminary, but before a final, decree? According to the High Court of Allahabad, the suit will abate the reason being that a suit is "pending" till a final decree is passed.[1] The said Court does not accept the position that the principle laid down by the Privy Council in Lachmi Narain v. Balmakund, I.L.R. 4 Pat. 61 is in any way applicable to such cases.

All the High Courts are agreed on the authority of the said Privy Council decision that the rule does not apply to such cases and that there can be no abatement on death after a preliminary and before a final decree.[2]

(1) Shahzad Singh v. Ram Ugrah Singh, 1930 All 211 (212): 125 Ind Cas 591.

O. 22, R. 3, Note 23.

The effect of this limited abatement on suit or appeal will depend upon the nature of the right or relief claimed in the suit or appeal. If such right or relief is an indivisible one existing in all the plaintiffs jointly or in or against all the appellants jointly the whole suit or appeal, as the case may be, will fail by reason of an abatement with respect to one of them.[2] But if such right or relief is divisible or exists individually in each, an abatement with respect to one or some alone will not cause the entire suit or appeal to fail.[3]

In appeals to which O. 41, R. 4 is applicable, i.e., where the appeal proceeds on grounds common to all the appellants so that any one of them could have prosecuted the appeal without the others, an abatement with respect to one of them will not cause the appeal to fail.[4] But if the nature of the appeal is such that it cannot be heard in the absence of any of the appellants the provisions of O. 41, R. 4 cannot be invoked and the whole appeal will fail.[5]

Where an appeal has abated, the respondent cannot claim its being heard even though he might have filed a memo. of cross-objections. He must file a separate appeal.[6]

As pointed in Note 18, supra, a judgment given in ignorance of an abatement is null and void.[7] The remedy of the legal representative in such cases is not to sue again on the same cause of action but to have the suit revived.[8] If not so revived, by an application under R. 9, the abatement becomes final operating as a judgment in favour of the defendant or respondent and can be set up as a defence in any subsequent claim by those claiming under the deceased plaintiff or appellant.[9]

O. 22, R. 3, Notes 24—26.

24. Award of costs.—The provision for the award of costs contained in this rule should not be taken in a restricted sense. The power to award costs in proper cases exists in Courts and this power is not restricted by this rule.[1] The rule only extends or recognises the power in cases of abatement under the rule.

The power can also be exercised by an appellate Court.[2]

25. Revision.—A applied to be added as the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff. It was found that A was not the legal representative. The Court thereupon, on that application itself, impleaded as legal representative another person who did not seek, and was not sought, to be impleaded. Held that the order was liable to revision.[1]

A, applied to be added as the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff. He was directed to file a separate suit to establish his claim as such. Such a suit was not filed. The Court thereupon ordered the first suit to abate. Held that the order of abatement was made without jurisdiction and can be set aside in revision.[2]

26. Appeal.—An order on an application under this rule allowing[1] or refusing to allow[2] a person to be brought on the record as the legal representative of a deceased party is not appealable. The reason is that such an order does not adjudicate upon the rights of parties on any point or points in controversy in the suit and is therefore not a decree[3] nor is such an order an appealable one under the provisions of S. 104 and O. 43, R. 1. The Judicial Commissioner's Court of Oudh has, however, held that such a matter is an adjudication which conclusively determines the rights of the parties in regard to a matter in controversy in the suit and is therefore a decree which is open to appeal.[4] Under the old Code an order under this rule whether a person should be brought on record as a legal representative of the deceased party was sometimes held to be one under S. 367 of the old Code (corresponding to R. 5 of this order) and was therefore held to be appealable under S. 588,

Cl. 18 of that Code.[5] Under the present Code there is no appeal from an order under R. 5 and the said cases would, therefore, be no longer law.

An order directing an abatement is not appealable by a person who is not a party to the suit.[6] Nor is an order rejecting an application that the suit might be declared to have abated, open to appeal.[7] It has been held in the undermentioned case that an order of rejection of a petition for substitution under this rule does not ipso facto cause the suit to abate.[8]

A decree dismissing the suit will be appealable by a party thereto.[9]

Where a suit automatically abates in the absence of an application under this rule within time, it has been held by the Lahore High Court that an application thereafter for substitution must be deemed to be made under R. 9, infra and that an order on such application would be appealable under the provisions of O. 43.[10]

Procedure in case of death of one of several defendants or of sole defendant.

R. 4. [S. 368.] (1) Where one of two or more defendants dies and the right to sue does not survive against the surviving defendant or defendants alone,[5] or a sole defendant or sole surviving defendant dies and the right to sue survives, the Court, on an application made in that behalf,[6] shall cause the legal representative of the deceased defendant to be made a party[8] and shall proceed with the suit.

(2) Any person so made a party may make any defence[15] appropriate to his character as legal representative of the deceased defendant.

(3) Where within the time limited[7] by law no application is made under sub-rule (1), the suit shall abate as against the deceased defendant.[17]

1. Legislative changes.

1. Under S. 368 of the old Code, the plaintiff had to make an application specifying the person whom he alleges to be the legal representative of the deceased defendant. It was, however, open to the person to object that he was not the legal representative: The real legal representative could also make the application to have himself impleaded. The present provision is more general in the matter of the application and lays down that "the Court shall, on an application made in that behalf, cause the legal representative of the deceased defendant to be made a party." Vide under Note 16, infra.

2. The words "as against the deceased-defendant" in sub-R. (3) are new.

2. Scope and applicability of the rule.—This rule deals with the death of a defendant in a pending suit. It will be interesting to note the position of this rule in relation to R. 2, on the one hand, and in relation to R. 10 on the other. If a case falls within R. 2, this rule is

O. 22, R. 4 Notes 2—3.

excluded;[1] and if a case falls within this rule, R. 10 will be excluded.[2]

For the application of this rule the following conditions are necessary, viz.:—

(1) There must be a suit (or an appeal). Thus the rule has been held to be inapplicable to an investigation into an application for permission to sue in forma pauperis;[3] and to proceedings by contributors under S. 214 of the Indian Companies Act of 1882.[4]

(2) The death of the defendant must be pending the suit. Thus the rule will not apply if such death was either before the institution of the suit[5] or after decree in suit.[6] In the former case, if the deceased was the sole defendant, the suit will have to be dismissed as being against Law.[7] If he was one of two or more defendants, his name will have to be removed from the record and the suit proceeded with against the other defendants, if need be, after an order under O. 1, R. 10.[8]

(3) The right to sue should survive but not against the surviving defendants alone. Thus if the right to sue does not survive at all the rule will not apply.[9] And if it it survives against the surviving defendants alone R. 2, and not this rule will apply.[10]

3. Rule applies to appeals.—This rule applies also to the case of the death of a respondent in a pending appeal.[1]

Under the old Code it was held by the Allahabad High Court in a number of cases that the provisions of S. 368 were limited to the case of the death of a respondent, who was a defendant in the Lower Court[2] and held that a defendant-appellant need not apply under the section for impleading the legal representatives of a deceased plaintiff-respondent.[3] This view was subsequently corrected in the said High Court itself.[4] It is now, however, well settled that the rule applies to the case of the death of a respondent whether he was a plaintiff or a defendant in the original suit.[5] The question whether the abatement is partial or total will, in the case of a suit, depend on the nature of the right claimed; but in an appeal it will have to be decided with reference to the nature of the decree appealed against.[6] As to this, see Notes 22 and 23, infra.

O.22, R.4, Notes 3—6.

4. Rule does not apply to execution proceedings—See R. 12.—This rule does not apply to execution proceedings.[1] R. 12 contains a specific declaration to this effect.

5. Where right to sue survives against persons other than the surviving defendant or defendants.—The rule does not apply if the right to sue survives against the surviving defendants alone. In other words, it is necessary that the right to sue should either survive to other persons alone or to other persons along with the surviving defendants. For some illustrative cases, see the following.[1]

6. "On an application made in that behalf."—Under the old Code it was for the plaintiff to bring the proper legal representatives of a deceased defendant on record and he was to choose the representative at his own risk.[1] Even the last paragraph in S. 368 was only subsequently added to the section. Before that addition, it was held that the Court could not except on the application of the plaintiff or the appellant place on record the representative of deceased sole defendant or respondent and that the representative of the deceased defendant or respondent could not apply under the section.[2] Under the present rule it is open to any person interested to apply for the addition of the proper representative.[3] But even under the present rule, in the absence of a proper application by anybody else, the duty of applying for bringing in the proper legal representatives on record ultimately rests on the plaintiff[4] as the consequence of not applying in time will be the abatement of the suit. Such an application is not obviated by the mere fact that a legal representative has been impleaded in another independent proceeding.[5]

Even under the old Code where the Court was to simply enter the name of the person nominated by the plaintiff, it was held that it had, in some cases, power to add other persons jointly with those nominated by the plaintiff.[6] Under the present Code the Court has power to determine who is the legal representative.

7. Limitation therefor.—Under the Limitation Act of 1877 there was a sharp conflict of opinion on the question as to the period within which an application to implead the legal representatives of a deceased respondent in an appeal had to be filed.[1] Under the present Code such application whether in a suit or in an appeal, to implead legal representatives are governed by Article 177 of the Limitation Act (IX of 1908).[2]

Has the Court power to excuse delay and accept an application made after the period of limitation? It has been held that S. 5 of the Limitation Act does not apply to an application under this rule.[3] But an abatement can be set aside for sufficient cause under R. 9, infra. So that in such cases the strict procedure would be to declare the suit or appeal to have abated and to allow the plaintiff or appellant as the case may be to apply under R. 9.[4] As to what is sufficient course, see R. 9, infra.

bring the legal representative on the record before proceeding further with it. The suit may be described to be in a state of suspension till then, and no orders excepting formal or processual orders can be passed.[1] If the suit is disposed of without impleading the legal representatives of a deceased party, retrial will be ordered.[2]

9. Two or more legal representatives.—Supposing that a defendant dies leaving two or more legal representatives the question arises whether all of them should be impleaded and what is the effect of a failure to do so. On this question the Allahabad[1], Bombay[2], Madras[3], Patna[4] and Punjab[5] Courts have held that even if one of them alone is impleaded, he sufficiently represents the estate and the suit does not abate. According to the Lahore High Court a bona fide application to bring in all those representatives who can be ascertained by the exercise of due care and industry will save abatement.[6] According to the Rangoon High Court if the person impleaded as a matter of fact represented the estate and no objection as to the want of proper representation is taken at the time, there will be no abatement and the decree will bind the estate.[7] According to the Nagpur view the plaintiff can get relief against the legal representative impleaded though it will not bind the other representatives.[8] The Sind Court has held that all the legal representatives should be brought on record in time, otherwise the suit will abate.[9] But even in that Court an objection that all the representatives have not been brought on record should be taken at the proper time, otherwise the defendants will be estopped from taking it at any subsequent stage.[10] In any event, if some of the legal representatives are specifically dispensed with the suit cannot proceed as against them and if the suit cannot proceed in their absence, the whole suit will abate.[11]

10. Wrong person as legal representative.—An application to implead somebody other than the proper legal representative of a deceased defendant is not valid[1] and a decree obtained against such person will ordinarily be not binding on the true representative or on the estate of the deceased defendant.[2] But such a decree will be binding in the following circumstances, viz:—

(i) That the plaintiff acted bona fide.

(ii) That the decree obtained is free from fraud or collusion.

(iii) That the person wrongly impleaded was so impleaded in a representative capacity and the decree was passed against him as representing the estate of the deceased.

(iv) That the plaintiff was not aware of any fact which displaced the apparent title of the person; and

(v) That the real legal representative had not intervened during the pendency of the suit.[3]

Thus a decree obtained after impleading a person having a prima facie claim to be considered the legal representative of a deceased defendant[4] or after impleading a person who, but for some other facts of which the plaintiff is not aware, would be such legal representative[5] will be binding on the estate. In such cases, however, conditions IV and V must be satisfied that is, the true representatives must not have intervened or applied to be made parties pending the suit[6] and the plaintiff must not, during such pendency, have been otherwise made aware that the person whom he has impleaded is not the true legal representative.[7] Where a wrong person has been impleaded as the legal representative the Court can, on being apprised of the fact of the existence of the legal representative, strike out the former's name and substitute the latter on the record.[8]

11. Joint Hindu family and legal representative.—When the deceased defendant is a member of a joint Hindu family it must be shown, before the other members can be impleaded as legal representatives, that prima facie the deceased had an estate which survived to the other members.[1] O. 22, R. 4, Notes 11—14.

12. Legal representatives already on record in another capacity.—See also Note 14 to R. 3.

It may be taken as fairly well settled that where the legal representatives of a deceased defendant are already on the record in the suit though in another capacity no application is necessary under this rule to implead them as legal representatives, and the suit will not abate by reason of the absence of such an application.[1] It is enough if the plaintiff at some time or other during the hearing of the suit, states the fact and gets it noted on the record.[2] Where, however, only some of the legal representatives are on the record but not all, it has been held by the Patna High Court that an application is necessary under this rule and that in its absence the suit will abate.[3] According to the High Court of Madras the legal representative already on the record may sufficiently represent the estate, the suit will not abate by reason of the absence of an application under this rule and the decree passed in the suit will bind the estate.[4]

13. Indian Succession Act and legal representative.—Where the deceased is governed by the Indian Succession Act, his legal representatives are his executors or administrators and not his heirs.[1] Even though no representation is taken out for his estate, the plaintiff cannot, on that ground, add his heirs as legal representatives.[2] The only course open to the plaintiff will be to move the Court to have an administrator appointed.[3] See also Note 10 to R. 3.

14. Pro-forma defendant or respondent.—Where the deceased defendant or respondent had no interest in the litigation, the rule does not apply and the failure to bring his legal representatives on the record within time will not cause the suit or appeal to abate.[1] Thus there will be no abatement for failure to bring in the legal representative of a deceased defendant or appellant, who was only a pro-forma defendant or appellant[2] or who was not a proper or necessary party to the suit or appeal.[3]

15. What pleas may be taken by a legal representative.—See also Note 16 to R. 3 and Note 7 to S. 50. A legal representative must continue the litigation on the cause of action sued upon and cannot set up a new or individual right.[1] He cannot set up a plea open to him personally.[2] Short of this he can take up any plea which may be appropriate to his character as legal representative.[3] Thus he can rely on anyone of the alternative defences of the deceased[4] even though it may not have been raised by him specifically.[5] But he cannot take up a new and inconsistent plea[6] or a plea contrary to the one taken up by the deceased.[7]

16. Effect of decree against legal representative of deceased defendant.—See also Notes 63 and 63-B to S. 11, Note 14 to S. 50 and Notes 5 and 6 to S. 52.

A decree obtained against the legal representative of a deceased defendant is binding on the estate. If the person against whom the decree has been obtained is a limited owner, such as a Hindu widow, the question whether the decree is or is not binding on the reversioner will depend upon the question whether the suit was one which affects the whole inheritance or only on a cause of action personal to the widow.[1] In the latter case the decree is not binding on the reversioners.[2] Whereas in the former case, i.e., when the decree has been fairly and properly obtained against the widow in her representative capacity, it is binding on the reversioners.[3] Where the person against whom the decree has been obtained is not the legal representative of the deceased, it has been held by the Bombay High Court, that the decree is not binding on the persons rightly entitled to the estate, even though the plaintiff acted under a bona fide mistake and was not aware of the existence of the true legal representative.[4] However this may be, where the legal representative stands by and allows a stranger to enter into possession of the property, a decree obtained bona fide against the latter will be binding on the former.[5] Moreover if the Court has decided that a person is the proper legal representative and passes a decree against him it is binding on the estate even though it may subsequently turn out that he is not the proper legal representative.[6]

O. 22, R. 4, Notes 16—17.

17. "The suit shall abate so far as the deceased defendant is concerned".—If a sole defendant dies and his legal representative is not brought on the record within time, the suit abates.[1] But if one of several defendants or appellants dies and his legal representative is not brought on record within time, the suit or appeal will, in the first instance, abate not in its entirety but only so far as the deceased defendant or respondent is concerned.[2] But such abatement may under certain circumstances result in the whole suit or appeal failing.[3] On this subject, see Note 22 below. Under the old Code a specific order of abatement was necessary and it was held that such an order ought not to be passed without notice to the plaintiff.[4] Under the present Code, however, the abatement takes place automatically and no separate order therefor is necessary.[5]

Where a suit abates it is, so to speak "dead or at an end"[6] and a decree passed in the face of such abatement is a nullity so far as the legal representative is concerned.[7]

18. Death after preliminary and before final decree.—See Note 19 to R. 3, and the undermentioned case.[1]

19. Decree against a dead person, see also O. 1, R. 10.—A decree passed against a dead person without impleading his legal representatives, is a nullity.[1] This does not mean that a party who was heard and against whom a decree has been passed on the merits can take advantage of the death of another party and claim a rehearing on the merits.[2] In an Allahabad case the plaintiff obtained an ex parte decree against a defendant who had been dead before the decree, but of whose death plaintiff had no knowledge. It was held that on the decree being held inexecutable the plaintiff may apply to have the case re-opened after impleading the legal representatives.[3]

Where some alone of several defendants had been dead the others may object to the execution on the ground that the decree is inexecutable in the absence of the legal representatives of the deceased defendants.[4] Where an objection had been taken to the passing of a preliminary decree on the ground of death of one of the defendants and same has been disallowed, the final decree cannot be granted afterwards.[5] O. 22, R. 4, Notes 19—22.

A decree passed by the Privy Council is an order of the Sovereign, and even if passed against a deceased respondent without impleading his legal representatives, it is not a nullity.[6]

20. O. 41, R. 20 and abatement.—R. 20 of O. 41, does not override the provisions of O. 22 and will not prevent an abatement.[1]

21. O. 1, R. 8 and abatement.—See Note 24 to O. 1, R. 8.

22. When suit or appeal abates against deceased defendant or respondent only.—As under R. 3, an abatement under this rule will in the first instance be only so far as the deceased defendant or respondent is concerned.[1] If the deceased was the sole defendant or respondent the abatement puts an end to the suit. But if he is one of many defendants or respondents the effect of the partial abatement on the whole suit or appeal will depend upon the nature of the suit or appeal. If, on account of the partial abatement, it becomes, for any reason, impossible to proceed with the suit or appeal to its final conclusion the entire suit or appeal will fail. But if the suit or appeal can proceed to a final adjudication in the absence of the legal representatives of the deceased defendant or respondent the partial abatement will not affect the rest of the suit or appeal.[2] Such a final adjudication is possible in cases where the interest of the deceased defendant or respondent can be separated from those of the others. In such cases a decree can be given against the latter without affecting the rights of the legal representatives of the former.[3] In such cases therefore the abatement will not result in a total failure of the suit or appeal. Thus in the following cases, abatement as regards the deceased was held not to affect the rest of the suit or appeal:—

(1) Where the suit is for the recovery of a specific sum of money from the deceased defendant and for a specific sum from each of the other defendants.[4]

(2) Where the suit relates to distinct plots of land in the hands of the several defendants including the deceased defendant,[5] or where it relates to specified shares[6] or to shares which are ascertained or ascertainable.[7]

(3) Where the liability sought to be enforced against the defendants is joint and several.[8] Thus the liability of co-promisors is joint and several[9] as also the liability of a surety.[10] In suits to enforce such liability the suit does not abate in toto on the death of one of the promisors or the surety as the case may be. The liability of joint wrong doers or tort feasors is joint and several and the suit or appeal will abate only so far as the deceased defendant is concerned.[11] On the same principle a suit for ejectment of trespassers will abate only so far as the deceased defendant is concerned and may be proceeded with against the rest.[12] The same principle applies to suits for rent against fixed-rate tenants[13] or joint holders of a holding[14] as their liability is likewise joint and several.

In short, therefore, the test to see whether the suit or appeal abates as a whole or only in part is to find out if the suit could, in the first instance, have been instituted and prosecuted with the deceased defendant left out.[15] In other words, if separate suits are maintainable against the defendants

O. 22, R. 4, Notes 22—23.

23. When suit or appeal abates against all, as a whole.—Where the absence of the legal representatives of the deceased from the record renders it impossible to proceed with the suit or appeal as against the rest, the suit or appeal will fail in toto.[1] Such impossibility may arise from the suit or appeal becoming imperfectly constituted for want of necessary or essential parties;[2] or from the undesirable possibility of having two inconsistent or contradictory decrees in one and the same suit;[3] or from the futility of proceeding further in a matter in which the decree if given, cannot be effectually executed by reason of the outstanding right of the legal representative of the deceased.[4]

On the above principles the non-impleading of the legal representatives of a deceased defendant will result in total failure of the suit or appeal in the following cases:—

(1) Where the interests of the defendants in the suit are joint and indivisible so that the interest of the deceased defendant cannot be separated from those of the rest[5] such as the interests in a pre-emption suit[6] but not the rights arising from a sale in distinct shares.[7]

(2) Where a decree appealed from is joint and indivisible.[8] But a decree cannot be said to be joint and indivisible merely because it is on one sheet of paper.[9] The interest awarded in the decree must in substance be joint and indivisible.[10]

In this connection the following distinction between a suit and an appeal should be noted. In a suit the nature of the abatement will depend upon the relief involved.[11] If the plaintiff set up a joint and indivisible right and the defendants set up a separate or separable right the point should be decided before deciding the nature of the abatement.[12] In an appeal, however, the nature of the abatement will have to be decided not upon the nature of the right involved in the suit but upon the nature of the relief awarded by the decree appealed against.[13] Thus, if the decree awarded joint possession the abatement will affect the whole appeal even though the plaintiff had asked for separate possession in the plaint.[14] Even in cases where the plaintiff could have asked for a joint and several relief, if he chooses to ask for a joint relief and on dismissal of the suit he files an appeal, the appeal will abate in toto on the death of one of the defendants-respondents, if his legal representatives are not brought on the record in time.[15] O. 22, R. 4, Notes 23—27.

24. Inherent power to add legal representative after abatement.—Even after a suit or appeal has abated the Court has inherent power to add the legal representatives of the deceased-defendant or appellant in proper cases.[1] The proper procedure in such cases would be to just declare that the suit had abated, then to set the abatement aside for valid reasons and then add the legal representatives and proceed with the suit or appeal.[2] It should, however, be noted that such a course will not be adopted unless very strong grounds are made therefor.[3]

25. Appellate Court and abatement.—The Court to appoint the legal representative of a deceased defendant or respondent will be the Court in which the suit or appeal was pending when the death took place.[1] Similarly the Court to declare an abatement will be the Court in which the suit or appeal was pending when the abatement took place.[2] Where, however, such Court proceeds to a decision on the merits in spite of an abatement that has taken place, the appellate or second appellate Court as the case may be may set aside the decision and either declare the abatement[3] or remand the matter for disposal according to Law.[4]

26. Award of costs.—If a suit abates on the ground that the legal representatives of a deceased defendant are not impleaded within time, there is no provision in the rule entitling the legal representatives to come to Court and ask for costs.[1]

27. Rehearing of suit or appeal.—Where a decree is passed against a deceased respondent without impleading his legal representatives, it is competent for the Court to entertain an application for impleading the legal representatives and to re-open and rehear the suit or appeal.[1]

28. Revision.—No revision lies from an order that a deceased plaintiff's legal representatives are not necessary parties to an application to set aside an ex parte decree.[1]

29. Appeal.—Under the old Code an order of abatement was appealable, not as a decree but as an order under S. 588 (18).[1] Under the present Code, where the facts fall within the four corners of the rule an order of abatement thereunder is not open to appeal. The only remedy is that provided by R. 9. But when the suit is dismissed as having abated and the propriety of the dismissal on the ground is questioned an appeal will lie as if from a decree.[2] Thus, where on abatement of a suit so far as the deceased is concerned, the Court dismissed the whole suit an appeal would lie.[3] No appeal lies from an order bringing in certain persons as legal representatives of a deceased defendant.[4]

O. 22, R. 5, Notes 1—5.

1. Legislative changes—

1. Under S. 367 of the old Code the Court had the option of either determining who is the legal representative of a deceased party or of staying the suit until the question has been determined in a separate suit.[1] Under the present rule the Court shall determine the question and has no option in the matter.
2. The words "at or before the hearing" which occurred in the old section have been omitted.
3. The provisions of the old section, in terms, applied only to the case of the death of a plaintiff.[2] But the present rule will apply to the case of the death of a plaintiff as well as to the case of the death of a defendant.

2. Scope of the rule.—As has been observed in Note 1 above, where a dispute as to who is the legal representative arises, it is the duty of the Court under this rule to decide it.[1] The decision, however, should be limited for the purpose of carrying on the suit and cannot have the effect of conferring any right to heirship or to property.[2]

The rule applies to appeals[3] but not to execution proceedings.[4]

3. Legal representative.—See Note 10 to R. 3.

4. "Shall be determined"—See also S. 50, ante.—See Notes 1 and 2 above. For the purpose of determining as to who is the legal representative, the Court must, when necessary, hold an enquiry in which evidence may be adduced[1] and must come to a conclusion as to who is the legal representative according to the rights of the parties.[2] It cannot simply make all the claimants parties without making any such enquiry.[3] A lengthy or elaborate enquiry is, however, unnecessary for the purpose[4] and where there is no dispute as to his being the legal representative, the mere fact that no steps were taken to have him declared as such, does not vitiate the decision in the case.[5]

5. "By the Court."—The "Court" here means the Court before whom the question as to who is the legal representative arises. It will be the trial Court, when the question arises in the suit: or the appellate Court, if the question arises in appeal. An appellate Court cannot delegate their powers to the trial Court. All that it can do is direct the trial Court to take evidence on the question and remit the same. The decision must be by the appellate Court.[1] This principle has in Madras been embodied in a rule framed by the High Court as a proviso to this rule.

6. Objection as to representative character.—The procedure laid down in this rule should be followed not only when two or more persons claim in opposition to each other but also when the representative character of a person who alone claims is denied by the other side.[1]

The objection should, however, be taken at the earliest possible moment.[2] But when the legal representative is appointed without notice to the other side, the latter can at the hearing raise objection to the representative character of the person so appointed.[3]

7. Effect of order under this rule.—An order under this rule will enable the person to represent the estate in the suit and will make an adjudication therein binding on the estate.[1] To this extent and in this sense it is final.[2] The mere admission of a person as legal representative for the purpose of further prosecution of the suit will not, however, conclusively establish his right to do so if his legal position is one of the main or vital issues in the suit itself.[3] Further, as has been seen in Note 2 above, an order appointing a person as a legal representative for the suit will not have the effect of deciding that he is the heir of the deceased party.[4]

8. Power of Court to correct its own order.—As already pointed out in Note 6, supra, where a person has been appointed legal representative without notice to the other side, the latter can afterwards object to the representative character of that person and the Court can after enquiry correct the order already passed.

9. Suit to establish title as legal representative.—The object of the rule is merely to take away the option contained in the old section and make it obligatory on the Court to decide the question. It confers no exclusive jurisdiction. Nor is an order under the rule a decree. A suit to establish the status denied by an order under this rule, is not barred.[1] In such a suit it is enough for the plaintiff to establish his legal representative character with respect to the property concerned in the main suit.[2] But with respect to such property he must not only show that the deceased was capable of transmitting the rights to him but also that he stepped into the shoes of the deceased with respect thereto.[3] O. 22, R. 5, Notes 9—11.

10. Appeal.—See also Note 26 to R. 3, ante. An order under S. 367 of the old Code (corresponding to this rule) was appealable as an order, under S. 588, Cl. 18 of that Code.[1] Under the present Code no appeal lies from such an order either as a decree or as an appealable order.[2]

But an objection to an order under this rule can under S. 105 of the Code, be a valid ground of attack in an appeal from the decree, see Note 6 to S. 105 last paragraph.

11. Revision.—If a Court simply adds a legal representative without holding an enquiry into the dispute and deciding it, it acts with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction and a revision will lie.[1]

R. 6. [New.] Notwithstanding anything contained in the foregoing rules, whether the cause of action survives or not, there shall be no abatement by reason of the death of either party between the conclusion of the hearing and the pronouncing of the judgment, but judgment may in such case be pronounced notwithstanding the death and shall have the same force and effect as if it had been pronounced before the death took place. O. 22, R. 6.

Synopsis.

1. Scope and applicability of the rule.
2 No abatement by reason of death after hearing.

1. Scope and applicability of the rule.—This rule is new and embodies an exception to the principle that the Court has no jurisdiction to pass a decree for or against a dead man.[1] It is based on the principle that a judgment pronounced at any time after the conclusion of the hearing shall be construed to be operative as if it had been delivered on the day on which the hearing was closed.[2]

Even under the old Code it had been generally held that the death of a party after the hearing but before pronouncement of the judgment will not make the judgment invalid.[3] The Punjab High Court, however, took a different view.[4] This rule gives effect to the former class of decisions.

For the application of the rule, it is immaterial whether the death is or is not brought to the notice of the Court.[5]

Where, however, the legal representative brought on the record is under a legal disability and no guardian or next friend is appointed to act for him, the decree is a nullity as against him and the rule cannot be invoked to validate the same.[6]

The principle of the rule will apply to proceedings in arbitration.[7]

2. No abatement by reason of death after hearing.—The principle of the rule will not apply unless the "hearing" had been concluded before the death.[1] Thus the rule will not apply where the party died on the day fixed for the hearing but before the hearing.[2]

The "hearing" contemplated by the rule is such a hearing as is provided for by O. 18 and includes arguments; and where anything remains to be done or furnished by either party as a basis of consideration which is to end in the judgment and decree capable of execution, the "hearing" cannot be said

It was held that this was not a case where the husband was liable for the debts of the wife and that the decree could not be executed against the second husband.[1]

1. Legislative changes:—

1. The word "bankruptcy" which occurred in paragraphs 1 and 2 of the old S. 370 has been omitted.
2. The words "[appointed under S. 351]" which occurred in paragraph 1 of the old section have been omitted.
3. The words " shall not bar the suit" have been changed into "shall not cause the suit to abate".
4. The words "(unless for any reason the Court otherwise directs)" occurring in the present sub-R. (1) are new.
5. The word "order" at the end of paragraph 1 of old section has been changed into "direct".
6. The words "may dismiss the suit and award to the defendant, etc." which occurred in para. 2 of the old section have been changed into "may make an order dismissing the suit and awarding to the defendant, etc."

2. Scope and applicability of the rule.—This rule applies were the plaintiff in a pending suit becomes insolvent. It does not apply where the defendant becomes an insolvent.[1] In the latter case the procedure to be followed is governed by the provisions of R. 10, infra.[1] There must have been an actual insolvency in which an assignee or receiver is appointed; the rule has no application to a case where there has been merely an application for a declaration of insolvency and a vesting order is made.[2]

On the insolvency of the plaintiff the only person entitled to continue the suit is the Official Receiver or Assignee. The insolvent has no right to do so.[3] Nor can any person claiming to have derived title under him continue the suit especially if he had not taken any steps to assert his interests till then.[4]

O. 22, R. 8, Notes 2—5.

It is only the individual right of the insolvent in the suit that is affected by his insolvency. Thus the adjudication of the guardian of a minor party does not debar him from continuing to act as guardian.[5]

On the insolvency of the plaintiff the Court should not straightaway dismiss the suit but should give notice to the Official Receiver or the Official Assignee as the case may be, in whom the property of the insolvent vests to appear and state whether he wishes to continue the suit.[6] If he expresses his wish to do so, it will be necessary to make an order directing him to give security for costs within a specified time.[7] But the order to give security can only be after notice to the Receiver and after he expresses his willingness to continue the suit. Thus where on the plaintiff's adjudication the Court straightaway passed an order that the Official Assignee should give security for costs within a time and should be made a party within a further time and that in default the suit should be set down for dismissal it was held that such an order was irregular.[8] A time should be fixed within which to give security.[9]

Where the Receiver declines to continue the suit or appeal, or to give security, the suit or appeal will abate, even without an application for dismissal by the other side.[10]

This rule does not apply to suits or proceedings under the Agra Tenancy Act (III of 1926), see Sch. 2, list 1.

3. Applicability of the rule to appeals.—The provisions of the rule apply to appeals.[1]

4. Applicability of the rule to execution-proceedings.—The rule does not apply to execution proceedings. A judgment-debtor cannot object to execution being taken against him on the ground of the decree-holder's insolvency. But the Receiver or the insolvency Court can step in and get the fruits of the execution handed over to him.[1]

5. "Insolvency" must be existing.—The rule does not as has been seen in Note 2 above, apply unless an adjudication has actually taken place.[1] Where a suit is instituted or continued by the Receiver and pending that the adjudication is annulled the Receiver can nevertheless continue the suit unless the property is diverted from him and re-vested in the quandom insolvent.[2]

7. Defendant's insolvency.—See Note 2, above.

8. Insolvency of pauper applicant.—The rule does not apply to the adjudication of a petitioner pending his application for permission to sue in forma pauperis. Such an application cannot be dismissed on the ground of the adjudication.[1] If the petitioner is adjudicated after he obtains leave to sue in forma pauperis, the Receiver can come in and continue the suit in the same way as the insolvent could have done.[2]

9. Suit instituted after adjudication.—After adjudication the insolvent has no right over property which has vested in the Receiver. In respect of such property therefore he has no right to institute a suit and a suit so instituted cannot be continued by the Receiver under this rule.[1] Suppose the plaintiff was adjudicated pending a suit, has he got the right to appeal against a decree in the suit? Yes, according to the Bombay High Court.[2] The High Court of Madras has, on the other hand, held that he cannot.[3]

10. Limitation.—There is no limitation for the receiver to appear and apply, on the adjudication of the plaintiff for being allowed to continue the suit.[1]

11. Costs payable by plaintiff prior to insolvency.—If the receiver elects to continue the suit he must give security only for the costs already incurred up to the time of his electing to continue the suit and not for subsequent costs as to which he will be personally liable.[1] The order for furnishing the security must be passed at the time of the receiver electing to continue the suit and not afterwards.[2] An order that the receiver need not furnish security is not appealable.[3]

12. Costs of successful defendant.—In England the executors and trustees in Bankruptcy containing a suit filed by the bankrupt will be personally liable for all costs from the beginning of the suit.[1] In India, however,

1. Legislative changes:—

This rule embodies the provisions of Ss. 371 and 372-A of the old Code—sub-Rr. (1) and (2) correspond to S. 371 and sub-R. (3) corresponds to S. 372-A.

The following changes between the rule and the above sections of the old Code may be noted:—

1. "The plaintiff or any person claiming to be the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff or the assignee or receiver in the case of an insolvent-plaintiff" have been substituted for "but the person claiming to be the legal representative of the deceased or bankrupt or insolvent-plaintiff".
2. The words "applicable to appeals" which occurred in S. 372-A, have been omitted.

O. 22, R. 9, Notes 2—3.

2. Scope and applicability of the rule.—The rule is a disabling one and should therefore be strictly construed.[1] Its application is limited to abatement or dismissal under one or other of the rules of this order and does not extend to abatement on account of some other cause.[2] Thus an application under sub-R. (2) cannot be made when the abatement is by reason of the fact that the right to sue does not survive.[3]

The rule does not apply to proceedings before the High Court on reference under S. 66 (2) of the Income-Tax Act.[4]

3. No fresh suit shall be brought on the same cause of action.—An abatement under R. 3 or 4 bars a fresh suit on the same cause of action.[1] If the fresh suit is, however, on a different cause of action[2] or if the plaintiff in the latter suit does not claim under a devolution of interest from the plaintiff in the former suit[3] the suit is not barred by this rule. Where the legal representatives of a deceased plaintiff applied to be brought on record, but on the objection of the defendant, the Court disallowed the application and dismissed the suit and the legal representatives thereupon filed a fresh suit on the same cause of action it was held that it was not open to the defendants to object the suit on the ground that it was barred under this rule.[4]

The dismissal of a suit for failure to deposit the costs of service of summons on the proposed legal representatives will not bar a fresh suit.[5]

It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that the bar under this rule has not got the same effect as res judicata and that it does not extinguish the right.[6] The High Court of Madras has held, distinguishing the Bombay decision, that an order of abatement operates as a judgment in favour of the defendant and that if it is not vacated by an application under this rule, it is conclusive of the defendant's rights to the property.[7]

4. Setting aside abatement.—The remedy provided for in sub-R. (2) applies where the suit has abated under R. 3 or 4[1] or where it has been dismissed under R. 8.[2] O. 22, R. 9, Notes 4—7.

An order setting aside an abatement should be passed only after notice to the other side. If it is passed without notice, the other side can raise their objections to the order at the hearing of the suit or appeal.[3]

5. Who may apply under this rule.—If the abatement was under R. 3, the application under this rule may be made by the legal representatives of the plaintiff. But a legal representative cannot apply under this rule if he had already applied to be brought on record within time and his application had been dismissed.[1] If the abatement is under R. 4, the plaintiff may make the application. If the suit has been dismissed under R. 8, the receiver or assignee in insolvency may apply.

Where there are more plaintiffs or appellants than one, each one of them can make the application.[1-a]

The reversioners or anyone of them can apply to set aside an abatement caused by the death of the widow-plaintiff.[2]

The legal representative of a respondent wishing to bring himself on the record need not apply to set aside an abatement of the appeal.[3]

6 Minor and abatement.—Where an application made on behalf of A, a minor, to be brought on the record in the place of B, the deceased plaintiff, is dismissed and A thereafter makes a second application, it can, in proper cases, be treated as an application under this rule for setting aside the abatement.[1]

7. Limitation. -Under Art. 177 of the Limitation Act, 1908, an application to set aside abatement should be filed within sixty days from the date of the abatement.[1] If the petitioner was prevented by any sufficient cause from making the application within the said period the delay in filing the application may be excused under S. 5 of the Limitation Act.[2] If no application is made within sixty days or within the extended time under S. 5 of the Limitation Act, the abatement becomes final and conclusive.[3]

8. "Sufficient cause."—An applicant for setting aside an abatement must show that he had sufficient cause for not taking timely steps to continue the suit.[1] As a matter of practice such cause must be alleged in the petition. It is, however, not legally necessary to do so; all that is necessary is that he should satisfy the Court that there was sufficient cause.[2] The question as to what is sufficient cause depends upon the facts and circumstances of each case.[3] The test to be adopted in determining it is to see whether the mistake or carelessness was real and unintentional and no damage has been done to the other side that cannot be repaired by costs or otherwise, or whether the negligence was culpable or the applicant mala fide or irrepairable injury would result to the other side by the granting of the application; in the former case the application must be granted.[3-a] In the latter case, it must be dismissed.[4] In the following cases an abatement was set aside under this rule on the ground of sufficient cause:—

(1) Where, by virtue of an order of the Court, the petitioner bona fide believed that no separate application was necessary to implead the legal representatives.[5]

(2) Where the legal representatives of a deceased appellant bona fide believed that the co-appellants were prosecuting the appeal and challenging the entire decree.[6]

(3) Where the petitioner was a Government servant and has sent the necessary papers to the vakil but the papers were received by the latter on the last day of limitation after the rising of the Court.[7] law without anything more, will not constitute "sufficient cause" for the purposes of this rule,[8] it cannot be laid down as an inflexible rule that it can never be a sufficient cause for excusing the delay.[9] Thus where the original period of limitation prescribed had been shortened by an amending Act and, in ignorance thereof the application was made after the expiry of the shorter period, it was held that there was sufficient cause.[10] O. 22, R. 9, Note 8.

On the question whether the fact that the applicant under this rule, was ignorant of the death of the party whose legal representatives had to be brought on the record, would constitute a sufficient cause for setting aside an abatement, it has been held that if the ignorance is due to carelessness or want of diligence on the part of the petitioner it will not constitute a sufficient cause.[11] Where on the other hand, it is not due to any want of reasonable diligence on his part, or it is due to events beyond his control it will constitute sufficient cause.[12] Thus, where the ignorance was due to the fact that the applicant was herself a pardanashin lady[13] or that the deceased was a pardanashin lady,[14] or that the applicant lived far away from the place where the deceased lived.[15] the abatement was set aside.

The negligence or forgetfulness of an agent especially appointed to look after the suit or appeal is not a sufficient cause to set aside an abatement.[16] But the collusion of the agent with the opposite side, will be a sufficient ground for setting aside the abatement.[17] Where the applicant gave instructions in time to her vakil to bring on record the legal representatives, but owing to a mistake of the vakil in failing to notice the change effected in the period prescribed for such an application, the application was not filed in time it was held that the delay should be excused.[18]

The fact that succession to the estate of the deceased is in doubt or is in dispute will not be a sufficient cause for not filing an application in time.[19]

Where an application, to add legal representatives, is filed after the period of limitation has expired, the Court may either first set aside the abatement by getting an application filed for the purpose and then substitute the legal representatives,[20] or in exceptional cases, even treat the application as one to set aside the abatement and pass necessary orders thereon.[21] Where such an application is allowed without objection, the time will be deemed to have been extended and the legal representatives to have been properly brought on the record.[22] Where the lower Court has considered all the circumstances and has decided that there is no sufficient cause[23] or has extended the time for substitution[24] the appellate Court will not interfere with the decision.

Where an application has been made under this rule within time a bona fide mistake therein can be corrected after the limitation period.[25]

9. Formal order of abatement, if necessary before setting aside abatement.—In cases under the old Code it was held that when a formal order of abatement had not been passed, the proper procedure on an application to revive the suit was to pass first an order of abatement and then an order setting aside the abatement.[1]

Under the present Code an abatement takes place automatically without any order and such abatement can be set aside on application under this rule even where no formal order declaring the abatement has been passed.[2] See Note 11.

10. Cause of action in the revived suit.—When a suit is revived under this rule it must be continued on the same cause of action; no new cause of action can be introduced into it.[1] O. 22, R. 9, Notes 10—13.

11. Substitution without setting aside abatement.—Strictly speaking, where an abatement has taken place, it should first be set aside before a substitution of the legal representative is ordered.[1] This rule is strictly applied in the Patna High Court.[2] In Bombay[3] and Allahabad[3-a] a more liberal interpretation is adopted and the substitution of legal representatives without first setting aside the abatement has been held to be a mere irregularity which does not vitiate the decision In a Calcutta case where such substitution was ordered without objection by the other side it was held that the decision cannot, in an appeal from the final order, be objected to on that ground.[4]

An application for substitution may, in substance, be treated as an application to set aside abatement.[5] This, however, should not be done when the merits of the case are against the petitioner.[6]

12. Remand.—Where an Appellate Court finds that there was an abatement in the lower Court, it should not proceed to set aside the abatement but should remand the case for disposal under this rule.[1]

Where an Appellate Court finds that the lower Court's refusal to set aside abatement is wrong and remands the application for rehearing the remand is not a final order.[2]

13. Appeal.—No appeal lies from an order setting aside an abatement.[1] Under the Code of 1877 there was no appeal even from an order refusing to set aside an abatement. But under the Code of 1882 as well as the present Code at the same time that this partial abatement resulted in the total abatement of the suit. Held, that though that portion of the order which decided that the suit had abated in toto may be a decree, the order declaring the partial abatement was one which could be set aside on an application under O 22, R 9, C P Code].

an appeal is allowed from such an order.[2] But no such appeal will lie when there has been no application to the Court to set aside the abatement.[3] An order refusing to set aside an abatement in an appeal cannot be appealed against.[4] See also Note 14.

14. Letters Patent Appeal.—The Allahabad[1] and Calcutta[2] High Courts have held that an order of a single judge setting aside an abatement in an appeal is a "judgment" within the meaning of Cl. 10 of the Letters Patent (Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent of the Calcutta High Court) and that therefore a Letters Patent appeal is competent from such an order.

An order setting aside an abatement passed by a Division Bench of the High Court, cannot, according to the Madras High Court, be set aside by another Bench of the High Court. The remedy is by way of review.[3]

15. Revision.—Generally speaking no revision lies from an order under this rule.[1] But where the order is passed without jurisdiction[2] or without adverting to the bar of limitation involved[3] a revision will lie.

Sub-Rule (2). See Note 8, Pts. (3) and (4).

Personal actions. See Note 9, Pt. (11) and Note 10, Pts. (3).

1. Legislative changes.—

1. The words "given either with the consent of all parties or after service of notice in writing upon them and hearing their objections, if any", which occurred in the old section have been omitted.
2. The words "or devolved" in the present sub-R. (1) are new.
3. The words "either in addition to or in substitution for the person from whom it has passed, as the case may be" which occurred in the old section, have been omitted.
4. Sub-R. (2) is new.

2. Scope and applicability of the rule.—The rule is an enabling one.[1] It is based on the principle that the trial of a suit cannot be arrested merely by reason of a devolution of the interest of a party in the subject-matter of the suit: that the person acquiring the interest may continue the suit with the leave of the Court: but that if he does not choose to do so the suit may be continued with the original party and the person acquiring the interest will be bound by, or can have the benefit of, the decree as the case may be.[2]

The rule applies to appeals in cases where the devolution takes place pending appeal.[3] It applies equally to cases of devolution of the interest of the plaintiff or of the defendant[4] and to the case of appellants as well as that of the respondents.[5]

In order that this rule may apply,

1. There must be an assignment, creation or devolution of an interest in the subject-matter of the suit.[6]

O.22, R.10, Notes 2—3.

2. Such assignment, creation or devolution of interest must be by, or from, a party to the suit and not a stranger.[7] Thus an assignee from the heir of a deceased plaintiff who was himself not brought on the record, cannot apply under this rule.[8]

3. The person to whom the assignment, creation or devolution of interest takes place must be arrayed on the same side in the suit as the person from whom it has passed.[9]

The rule is a residuary one governing cases which are not provided for by the previous rules of the order[10] so that if any of these other rules apply to the facts of a particular case the effect of that rule cannot be got rid of by a resort to this rule.[11] Where, however, there are two devolutions, viz., one by the death of a party (coming under Rr. 3 and 4) and the other, by a transfer of his interest (prior to his death), the transferee has the right to be impleaded under this rule and the death of the plaintiff cannot take away the right.[12]

It should be noted that there is no abatement under this rule.[13]

3. Other cases of assignment, creation or devolution of interest pending suit.—As has been seen in Note 2 already this rule provides for all cases not falling within the scope of the previous rules of the order, such as rules 2, 3, 4, 7 and 8.[1] The words "other cases, etc." mean cases other than those specifically provided for in the preceding rules.[2] Those words were in one case held to indicate that the rule did not apply to a case of death.[3] But such a restricted interpretation does not appear to be warranted by the rule. It would seem to apply even to cases of death if such cases do not fall within the provisions of Rr. 3 or 4, ante.[4]

As illustrations of "other cases of assignment, creation or devolution of interest" falling within this rule may be mentioned cases of transfer inter vivos[5] or cases where a mortgagee party in a suit releases the property to the mortgagor.[6] Wherein a suit is instituted against a widow for recovery of debt due by her husband and, pending the suit she gives birth to a posthumous son, the son can be brought on the record under the principle of this rule.[7] Where a suit was instituted against the G.I.P. Railway and pending the suit the line was taken over by the Government, it was held that the Government should be made a party under this rule.[8] But there is no "assignment, creation or devolution of interest" by a company going into liquidation.[9] O.22, R.10 Notes 3—6.

4. Assignment of interest.—As pointed in Note 3, supra a transfer inter vivos such as a sale[1] or any other kind of transfer will come within the rule. It is also not necessary that such transfer should be direct.[2]

5. "Interest."—A right to maintain a suit,[1] the right to recover mesne profits given by a decree[2] and the rights and interests of a putnidar[3] are "interests" within the meaning of the rule. But the interest must be an interest in the subject-matter of the suit[4] or one which is vitally affected by the suit.[5] For instances where the rule was held not to apply on this ground, see the cases cited below.[6] The word "interest" includes also a portion of the interest.[7]

6. Trial Court can bring assignee on record pending an appeal.—Where the suit is pending, the mere fact that an appeal is filed from an interlocutory order made in the suit will not deprive the Court of the first instance of its jurisdiction to implead parties under this rule.[1]

O.22, R.10, Notes 7—9.

7. Transfer of decree.—The rule has no application to the transfer of the decree in the suit.[1]

8. Creation of interest.—A lease created pending a suit for possession and mesne profits is a creation of interest and the lessee can be made a party to the suit under this rule.[1] Where, however, the lease was created after a decree for possession and mesne profits and pending proceedings in ascertainment of the mesne profits, the lessee cannot be impleaded.[2]

Under the old Code an attaching creditor of the decree pending appeal therefrom could not claim to be impleaded in the appeal.[3] But in view of the present sub-R. (2) he can. But even under the present rule, a person who has attached property has been held not entitled to come in, in a mortgage suit regarding the attached properties.[4]

An adoption does not create an interest within the meaning of the rule.[5]

9. Devolution of interest.—Where a suit is brought by or against a person in a representative character and a devolution of the representative interest takes place, the rule that is applicable is not rule 3 or rule 4 but rule 10, whether such devolution is by virtue of the death of the person or for any other cause.[1] Thus it will apply to a public trust which is represented at different stages of a suit by different representatives.[1-a] When a trustee dies or retires[2] or is removed from office[3] and another is appointed in his place the estate "devolves" on the new trustee within the meaning of this rule. The fact that the original trustee was wrongly appointed as trustee will not make any difference.[4]

The following are illustrations of other cases of such devolution of interest:—

1. One of four Uralans of a Malabar Devaswam sued for redemption of a Kanom. The other Uralans had been made party defendants. One of three latter died pending suit. Held it was a case of devolution under this rule.[5]

2. The manager of an undivided Mitakshara family files a suit as manager of the family and dies pending suit. The succeeding manager can come in under this rule.[6] O.22, R.10, Notes 9—10.

3. The manager of an encumbered estate under the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act (VI of 1876) files a suit on behalf of the estate. Pending the suit the estate is released and restored to the owner. The owner can come in under this rule.[7]

4. A Receiver appointed in a suit files a suit on behalf of the estate. Pending suit he is discharged and another Receiver is appointed in his place. The latter can come in under this rule.[8]

5. A suit was instituted claiming a right of pre-emption and for possession of property as against the vendor. Pending the suit the vendor's rights devolved on another person under another decree. The latter person can be impleaded as defendant under this rule.[9]

In cases of devolution other than by death, it should be noted that if the person on whom the estate devolves does not bring himself on record the decree passed in the suit will be binding on him.[10]

Where the cause of action is purely a personal one there can be no devolution of interest.[11] An adoption creates no devolution of interest within the meaning of this rule.[12]

10. Insolvency of defendant.—The rule applies also to the devolution of interest by operation of law.[1] The insolvency of a defendant will cause a devolution of his estate on the Official Receiver or the Official Assignee as the case may be. But the question whether, on the adjudication of a defendant pending suit, the Receiver in insolvency can come in under this rule will depend upon the "interest" involved in the suit[2]. If it is a suit in personam such as for instance a mere money suit, no interest devolves on the Receiver or Assignee and he cannot come in under this rule.[3] But if it is a suit relating to the "estate," such as a suit to enforce a mortgage, the Receiver or Assignee is entitled to come in and should be impleaded.[4] If in such cases the Receiver or Assignee refuses to defend the suit, the insolvent cannot on that ground defend it.[5] If, however, the suit is of such a nature that it can go on without the insolvent defendant, the Receiver need not be made a party.[6]

11. Representative suits.—See Note 9, supra.

12. Annulment of order of adjudication.—Where, pending a suit instituted by the Official Assignee, the adjudication is annulled without any conditions, the quandom insolvent is entitled to be substituted as plaintiff under this rule.[1]

13. "During the pendency of the suit."—The rule does not apply unless the assignment, creation or devolution of interest takes place during the pendency of the suit. Thus it does not apply, if the assignment, creation or devolution of interest takes place before the suit is instituted.[1] Where, however, the suit has been instituted it is pending so long as the final decree has not been passed in it; the rule is thus applicable to cases of assignment, creation or devolution of interest, after the preliminary and before final decree.[2] In fact the Courts which hold Rr. 3 and 4 do not apply to cases of death after the preliminary decree, hold that this rule applies to such cases.[3]

There is considerable doubt as to whether this rule authorises the addition of a party to the suit after decree:[4] and the rule has been held not to apply to cases of assignment of interest between the date of the decree and the date of the filing of the appeal, though the assignee can be joined in the appeal.[5] Similarly where a decree has been amended the question whether the rule is applicable to cases of assignment, etc., of interest between the original and the amended decree has been left undecided.[6]

14. Application under this rule when to be made.—The rule provides for a continuation of the suit by the assignee or other person on whom the interest has devolved. Therefore, on the one hand, an application under the rule can be made at any time when the suit is pending.[1] On the other it cannot be made after a final decree has been passed.[2] O.22, R.10, Notes 14—16.

The fact that the assignee made no application when the suit was pending will not, however, debar him from filing an appeal from the decree as a person claiming under the party within the meaning of S. 146.[3] An application under this rule may also be made to the appellate Court during the pendency of an appeal from the decree.[4]

15 Execution proceedings.—There is a conflict of views on the question whether the rule applies to execution proceedings. On the one hand, the facts that the rule relates to assignment before the final order in the suit, that it relates to assignments pending suit and that it provides for a continuation of the suit, have been relied on for holding that the rule does not apply to execution proceedings. On the other hand the fact that Rule 12 makes no mention of this rule as one of these not applicable to execution has been relied upon for holding that by implication, this rule applies to execution proceedings also. The former view prevails in Allahabad[1] and Calcutta.[2] In Patna the applicability of the rule to such proceedings has been doubted.[3] In Madras the corresponding section of the old Code was held not to apply to execution proceedings.[4] A Full Bench of the High Court, however, held by a majority that the present rule was applicable to execution proceedings.[5] But this decision has been explained away in later cases which have held the rule inapplicable to execution proceedings.[6]

16. Laches.—This rule vests in the Court a discretion in the matter of allowing the suit to be continued by or against the assignee; and the permission may be refused on sufficient grounds. Thus, delay or laches will be a ground for refusing permission under this rule.[1]

O.22, R.10, Notes 17—20.

17. No new suit.—So long as no final decree has been passed the assignee can carry on the suit and cannot in disregard thereof, file a new suit for the same relief.[1] And where an assignee is added in a pending suit the suit merely continues as against him and does not become a new suit.[2]

18. "By leave of Court".—An assignee under this rule is not entitled to continue the suit as a matter of right. The leave of Court must first be obtained. The granting of the leave is, however, discretionary with the Court[1]. The assignee has the option of either getting impleaded or keeping quiet if he considered his interests already protected.[2]

The leave should not be given without notice to the party concerned.[3] While the admission of assignment by such party is sufficient for giving the leave,[4] it should not be refused merely because the assignment is challenged.[4] In such cases the Court should go into the question of the truth or validity of the assignment.[5] But where, in addition to the assignment being disputed, there has been long delay in making the application, leave may be refused.[6]

19. Effect of adding new parties under this rule.—As already pointed out (in Note 17, supra) the suit only continues against the assignee. He will be entitled to continue the further proceedings from that date but is bound by all orders passed upto that date.[1] Similarly after the assignee is impleaded the assignor, though on record, will be concluded by all legal and bona fide proceedings taken by or against the assignee.[2]

Generally speaking the assignee will not be allowed to set up a case inconsistent with the one set up by his assignor. But, in cases of institutions represented at different stages by different representatives, the Court has a discretion to allow amendments and new pleas in order to avoid multiplicity of suits.[3]

20. Appeal.—Under the old Code there was a conflict of opinion regarding the appealability of an order granting or refusing permission under this rule.[1] This is no longer of any interest as the present O. 43, R. 1 (l) gives a right of appeal from an order granting as well as from an order refusing such leave.[2] In fact an appeal is the only remedy of a party aggrieved by such order.[3] O.22, R.10, Notes 20—22.

Where an order purports to be passed under this rule an appeal will lie, even though, on the facts, the order was improper.[4] But where the order is not one under this rule at all no appeal will lie.[5]

21. Letters Patent Appeal.—An order refusing the application of an assignee of the plaintiff under this rule is a "judgment" within the meaning of S. 15 of the Letters Patent.[1]

22. Limitation.—The right to make an application under this rule is a right which accrues from day to day. There is, therefore, no limitation for application which can, therefore, be made at any time.[1]

Before the insertion of sub-S. (2) to S. 22 of the Limitation Act of 1908, there was a conflict of opinion as to whether the section applied to parties added under this rule. One view was that it did.[2] Another view was that it did not.[3] The insertion of sub-S. (2) in S. 22 of the Limitation Act now makes it clear that that section does not apply to parties added under this rule.

same decree the legal representatives have been impleaded will not be enough.[4] But where the legal representative has, of his own accord, come on record, no further application by the appellant is necessary.[5] There will be no abatement when the deceased is only a pro forma respondent.[6] This rule, and consequently the provisions of the previous rules, do not apply when the devolution of interest takes place before the filing of the appeal, i.e., after the decree in the suit and before the appeal is filed.[7]

The rule has been held to be inapplicable to an application under S. 21-A of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act.[8]

2. Abatement of appeals in personal actions.—As a general rule the right to appeal in a personal action does not survive on the death of either party.[1] But there are certain personal claims like a claim for damages with respect to which a suit and an appeal will stand on different footings. So long as such claims remain unconverted into a decree as, for instance, where the suit to enforce the claim is dismissed and there is an appeal against the dismissal the appeal will abate on death of the party.[2] But if the suit has been decreed and the appeal is against the decree, the death of either party will not cause abatement of the appeal.[3] The principles underlying the above have been discussed, in Rr. 1, 3 and 4, supra. If the suit is decreed in the lower Court, but set aside in first appeal and the death takes place pending a second appeal, there will be no abatement.[4] The reason is that the claim having once been converted into a decree the fact that the decree has been set aside in first appeal will not affect the survival of the right.

3. Appeal by several defendants on grounds common to all.—Where the appeal is by several appellants on a ground common to all of them and one of them dies and his legal representatives are not impleaded within time, the entire appeal can nevertheless proceed as a whole. The reason is that there is an abatement only so far as the deceased is concerned. But from the nature

6. Guardian cases—Abatement of appeal.—Where the right to guardianship is based on a personal preference, the appeal relating to such right will abate on the death of the party.[1] Otherwise not.[2]

7. Appellate Court's power to declare abatement of suit.—When the sole respondent dies in appeal and the appellant claims to be his legal representative, it is not the suit but the appeal that abates and it is the appellate Court that should declare the abatement.[1]

8. Appeal in suit for waqf property.—Certain persons sued in their capacity as followers of a Shrine for a declaration that certain property was waqf property. They succeeded in the suit and there was an appeal against the decree. Pending appeal one of the plaintiffs respondents died: Held that appeal did not abate.[1]

9. Death during pendency of appeal in the Privy Council.—The judgment of the Privy Council is an order of the Sovereign. O. 22 of the Code has no application to appeals before the Privy Council. Consequently, on the death of a party, in an appeal pending before the Privy Council no question of impleading legal representatives or of limitation therefor arises[1] and the judgment given without impleading legal representatives is not, on that ground, a nullity.[2]

10. Limitation for application for substitution.—Under the old Code and the old Limitation Act there was a good deal of controversy as to the article of the Limitation Act applicable to applications for substitution under the section corresponding to this rule.[1] But this is now of no practical importance as the limitation for all applications under this rule is specifically provided for in Articles 176 and 177 of the Limitation Act, 1908 under which the application should now be filed within 60 days of the death of the party.

At the end of the rule add the words.—

Proceedings between preliminary and final decrees—If proceedings in execution. See Pt. (15).

1. Execution proceedings.—This rule is new. Under the old Code there was a great difference of opinion as to whether the provisions relating to abatement contained in the previous rules applied to execution proceedings, though in several cases it was held that they did not[1] the present rule affirms the view expressed in those cases.[1-a]

It should be noted that the only provisions specified as not applicable to execution proceedings are those contained in Rr. 3, 4 and 8 and that, even as to these it is only in respect to the abatement of the proceedings that those rules do not apply.[2] In other words the rule cannot be interpreted to mean that no substitution can be made in execution proceedings[3] and the Judicial Committee have specifically laid down that such substitution can be made.[4] On the death, therefore, of a decree-holder, pending an execution proceeding, can his legal representative get himself substituted and carry on the proceedings or should he file a separate execution application? The Bombay[5] and Calcutta[6] High Courts have held that he can continue the proceedings and that he need not present a separate execution application. According to the Madras High Court, the legal representative can be substituted under S. 146 and O. 21, R. 16 and be allowed to continue the application.[7] The Oudh Chief Court, however, hold the view that the old application cannot be continued and that the only remedy of the representative is to file a fresh execution application.[8] Where such substitution is allowed there is no fixed time within which the application should be made.[9] But such an application for substitution will not be made a step-in-aid of execution.[10]

There is a conflict of opinion as to the applicability of this rule to appeals against orders in execution. It has been held by the High Court of Madras[11] that an appeal against an order made in execution proceedings is not itself a proceeding in execution of a decree or order, that this rule does not apply to appeals against orders made in execution proceedings and that such appeals are subject to the same rules in regard to abatement as any other appeals. The High Court of Lahore[12] and Patna[13] and Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur[14] have, on the other hand, held, that this rule applies to such appeals. Proceedings after preliminary decree are not proceedings in execution and this rule will not apply to such proceedings.[15] Under the old Code, proceedings for the ascertainment of mesne profits were proceedings in execution and therefore this rule applied to such proceedings.[16] Under the present Code, however, the position is different.

An application to set aside a sale is not a proceeding in execution for after the sale and the subsequent deposit of the sale amount the execution is complete. Consequently this rule does not apply to such applications.[17]

As to the applicability of R. 8 to execution proceedings, see the undermentioned case.[18] See also the notes to various rules of this order as to the applicability thereof to execution proceedings.

1. Legislative changes.—

Under the law before the Code of 1859, the Court's leave was not necessary for bringing a fresh suit where a suit had been withdrawn by the plaintiff.[1] S. 97 of the Code of 1859, gave power to the Court to permit a suit to be withdrawn with the liberty to sue afresh, if it was satisfied that there were sufficient grounds for such a course. The words as to the suit failing by reason of some formal defects were first introduced in the Code of 1877.

2. Scope, object and applicability of the rule.—The law as to the withdrawal of suits as enacted in the present rule is as follows:—

(a) A plaintiff can withdraw a suit as a matter of right without the permission of the Court. But in this case he shall be precluded from suing again on the same cause of action. He cannot withdraw a suit reserving to himself a right to bring a fresh suit.[1]

Note 2.
(1) U E Maung v. P A R P Chettiar Firm, 1928 Rang 273 (274): 6 Rang 494.

(b) A plaintiff may, in the circumstances mentioned in sub-R. 2, be permitted by the Court to withdraw from a suit with liberty to sue afresh on the same cause of action.[2] O. 23, R. 1, Notes 2—5.

The rule does not apply to alternative claims on the same cause of action.[3]

3. Applicability of rule to appeals.—The present rule applies also to appeals and an appellate Court can therefore allow the withdrawal of an appeal with liberty to bring a fresh appeal or suit.[1] The High Court may allow a second appeal to be withdrawn.[2] The effect of the withdrawal without liberty of an appeal is to make the decree of the lower Court res judicata and the only executable decree in the case.[3]

4. Suits in Rent Courts.—The rule does not apply to suits under the Bengal Tenancy Act, which is a complete Code in itself.[1] Nor will the withdrawal without permission of an application under S. 105 of the Act or of a suit under S. 106 of the Act bar a fresh suit in the Civil Court in respect of its subject-matter. The meaning of sub-R. (2) of O. 23, R. 1 is that the plaintiff shall be precluded from bringing a fresh suit in that or in any Court of similar or co-ordinate jurisdiction.[2]

But the rule applies to suits under North West Provinces Rent Act, 1851, inasmuch as the Rent Courts under that Act are governed by the Code in those matters on which the Act is silent.[3]

5. Probate proceedings.—The rule does not apply to applications for probate, inasmuch as S. 55 of the Probate and Administration Act (now S. 268 of the Succession Act of 1925) which provides that the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code should apply to proceedings for probate is limited by the words "so far as circumstances of the case permit".[1]

6. Execution proceedings.—The rule does not apply to execution proceedings[1] including claim proceedings[2] as is made clear by R. 4, infra. The undermentioned cases holding the contrary view are no longer good law.[3]

7. Insolvency proceedings.—This rule read with S. 141, supra applies to proceedings in insolvency.[1]

8. Application for final decree.—Where an application for final decree is withdrawn it does not preclude a second application for the same purpose.[1] The reason is that O. 23, R. 1 applies only where a suit or part of a suit is withdrawn.

9. Set-off.—It is doubtful whether a defendant claiming a set-off can be allowed to withdraw his claim for set-off with liberty to sue again for the amount which formed the subject-matter of such claim.[1]

10. At any time after institution of suit.—Sub-R. 1 provides that at any time after the institution of a suit a plaintiff can withdraw his suit. As a general rule, a plaintiff can do this of his own accord and the order of the Court is not necessary for the purpose.[1] But the withdrawal must be made before judgment is passed in the case.[2] A plaintiff cannot also be allowed to withdraw his suit so as to deprive the defendant of any rights that may have accrued to him. Thus, where, in a partition suit, the defendant has become entitled under S. 3 of the Partition Act, to purchase the plaintiff's share at a valuation to be fixed by the Court,[3] or where a preliminary decree has been passed in such a suit,[4] or in a suit for accounts,[5] the plaintiff cannot be permitted to terminate the suit by withdrawing it. Where, in such cases, the plaintiff desires to withdraw the suit, the proper course is to transpose the plaintiff as defendant and the defendant as plaintiff and proceed with the suit.[5-a] O. 23, R. 1, Notes 10—11.

Where in a scheme suit under S. 92 of the Code the plaintiff applies to withdraw the suit and it appears that its object is to prevent the Court from deciding the suit on the merits, the Court can under O. 1, R. 10 transpose some of the defendants as plaintiffs and proceed with the suit notwithstanding the withdrawal of the suit.[6]

A plaintiff who withdraws a suit under Sub-R. 1 must do so unconditionally. He cannot abandon the suit and at the same time ask for a decision on the merits of the case.[7] He is also liable to pay such costs as the Court orders him to pay.[8] But the payment of the costs cannot be made a condition precedent to his withdrawing the suit.[8-a] As to costs in a wife's suit for dissolution of marriage which is withdrawn by her, see the undermentioned case.[8-b]

A withdrawal under sub-R. 1 may be in any form. Where the plaintiff enters into a compromise with the defendant but does not communicate the terms of the compromise to the Court, he should be held to have withdrawn his suit under this sub-rule.[9] Similarly, when a suit is dismissed at the request of the parties on a petition of compromise being filed, the dismissal operates as a withdrawal of the suit under this sub-rule.[10]

11. Power of Appellate Court to allow withdrawal of suit.—A Court of appeal has power, in a proper case, to grant permission to withdraw a suit with liberty to file a fresh suit,[1] though such power should be used very cautiously.[2] A contrary view, however, has been taken by the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court.[3] But it is submitted that this (the latter) view cannot be supported, seeing that in one case, even the Privy Council on an appeal allowed the suit with reference to a portion of the subject-matter to be withdrawn with liberty to sue again.[4] But the appellate Court has no power to allow a suit to be withdrawn before the appeal has been admitted.[5] So also where a suit is dismissed and the appeal from the decree of dismissal is also dismissed, the appellate Court cannot as part of the same order allow the suit to be withdrawn with liberty to sue again.[6]

12. Withdrawal of suit by plaintiff-appellant—A plaintiff-appellant is not entitled as a matter of right to withdraw his suit and he will not be permitted to do so if the effect of allowing him to withdraw it would be to deprive the defendant of the benefit of the lower Court's adjudication in his favour.[1]

13. Withdrawal of suit by plaintiff-respondent.—A plaintiff-respondent is not entitled, as a matter of right, to withdraw his suit pending the appeal but the Court may, in the exercise of its discretion, allow him to do so. A plaintiff sued the Government and some ryots, claiming a certain channel as his private property and praying for an injunction restraining interference with his rights. A decree was passed in the suit in plaintiff's favour. Against this decree the Government did not appeal but the ryots appealed. Then the plaintiff sought to withdraw his suit against the ryots being satisfied with a decree against the Government. Held, that he could not be allowed to do so as the decree against the Government considerably prejudiced the rights of the other defendants, viz., the ryots and that the proper course was to hear the appeal on the merits.[1]

14. Withdrawal of application for execution.—The provisions of O. 23 do not apply to execution proceedings (see R. 4, infra). But a party setting the Court in motion has the right to withdraw the proceedings from the Court. Hence, a decree-holder may withdraw his application for execution and if the Court persists in selling the judgment-debtor's property after such withdrawal it acts without jurisdiction.[1] But the procedure as to the Court allowing withdrawal with permission to sue afresh does not apply to execution proceedings.[2] Conversely, the withdrawal of an application for execution does not require the sanction of the Court to enable fresh proceedings to be taken.[3] See also Note 6, ante.

15. Withdrawal of application for entering up satisfaction of decree.—Where a decree-holder applies to enter up satisfaction of a decree but afterwards wants to withdraw his application, it has been held that the Court should not allow him to do so, but should inquire into the matter under O. 21, R. 2. Allowing a withdrawal of the application without any such inquiry would amount to a refusal to exercise jurisdiction under O. 21, R. 2 such as would justify interference by the High Court in revision.[1]

16. Withdrawal of application for withdrawal of suit.—A plaintiff applying to withdraw his suit unconditionally has a locus penitentiae until his petition has been acted upon by the Court, and he can withdraw his petition at any time before an order is made as prayed for in the petition.[1]

17. Withdrawal of suit on behalf of minor.—Court should be very jealous of the interests of minors, and should not allow a suit instituted on behalf of a minor to be withdrawn without being satisfied that it is for the minor's benefit. Where the next friend of a minor fraudulently withdraws a suit on behalf of a minor, the latter can sue again in respect of the same subject-matter.[1]

It has been held by the High Court of Madras that the Court should not allow the unconditional withdrawal of a suit on behalf of a minor, by the minor's next friend without liberty being reserved to bring a fresh suit.[2] According to the High Court of Calcutta the withdrawal of a suit by the next friend of a minor has the same effect as the withdrawal by a person of full age.[3]

18. Withdrawal of suit by pauper plaintiff.—The withdrawal of a suit by a pauper plaintiff amounts to failure in the suit within the meaning of O. 33, R. 11, and the plaintiff must pay the Court-fees under that rule.[1]

19. Withdrawal of suit by some of several plaintiffs.—Where there are several plaintiffs in a suit the suit cannot be withdrawn without the consent of all the plaintiffs.[1] But one of several co-plaintiffs or co-appellants may withdraw from the suit or appeal so far as his own interest is concerned.[2]

The withdrawal of unnecessary plaintiffs from a suit does not cause the dismissal of the suit.[3]

20. Withdrawal of suit by vakil.—The authority to compromise an appeal, conferred on a vakil by a vakalatnama, does not authorise him to withdraw the appeal unconditionally.[1] But a vakalatnama which authorises him to choose arbitrators, prefer objections to the award, file solenamah, and do all necessary acts in connection with the suit will include also an authority to withdraw a suit under this rule.[2]

21. "As against all or any of the defendants."—Where there are several defendants to a suit, the plaintiff may withdraw his suit as against some of the defendants alone,[1] and if it is so withdrawn without the liberty of suing again being reserved, a subsequent suit against them will be barred.[2] But where the names of some of the defendants are struck off, the suit is not withdrawn as against them and a subsequent suit against them is not barred.[3]

22. Effect of permission.—The granting of the permission to withdraw with liberty to bring a fresh suit removes the bar of res judicata which would otherwise apply if a fresh suit on the same cause of action is brought.[1] It places the plaintiff in the same position as he would have been in, had he brought no suit at all.[2] But the granting of the permission to withdraw a suit with liberty does not imply the recognition of the maintainability of the second suit.[3] Thus, where a suit instituted with the leave of the Court under Cl. 12 of the Letters Patent is withdrawn with liberty to bring a fresh suit, and an application is again made under Cl. 12 of the Letters Patent for leave to institute the fresh suit, there is nothing to prevent the Court from dealing with the application and granting or refusing leave as it deems proper.[4]

O. 23, R. 1, Notes 22—25.

23. Withdrawal from suit pending arbitration.—After a reference to arbitration has been made by order of Court under Sch. 2 of the Code the Court has no jurisdiction, whether before or after the award has been passed, to allow the suit to be withdrawn with liberty to bring a fresh suit.[1] And this is so even though, the reference is invalid, and the award consequently void.[2] But where the reference to arbitration is private and out of Court and an application is made to the Court under Sch. 2, para. 20 of the Code, to file the award, the applicant may be allowed to withdraw the application.[3]

24. Withdrawing from suit after suit has abated against some of the defendants.—Where a suit abates as against a particular defendant by reason of his legal representatives not having been brought on the record within the period of limitation and the plaintiff thereupon withdraws his suit with permission to bring a fresh suit, the fresh suit can only be brought against defendants who were actually on the record at the time of the permission and not against the legal representatives of the deceased defendant.[1]

25. Formal defect.—The expression "formal defects" connotes defects of various kinds not affecting the merits of the case.[1] A defect which goes to the root of the plaintiff's claim is not a formal defect.[2] The "formal defect" need not necessarily be in the pleadings.[3]

The rule requires that the Court must be satisfied that the suit must fail by reason of some formal defect. Hence, mere objections by the defendant are not enough.[4]

The following are some examples of "formal defects" within the rule:—

(1) Omission to obtain the permission of the Insolvency Court for filing the suit.[5]

(2) Misjoinder of parties or causes of action.[6]

(3) Erroneous valuation of the subject-matter of the suit.[7]

(4) The institution of a suit in a Court which has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit is a formal defect or at least one analogous to a formal defect so as to come within sub-R. 2 (b). But in such a case the Court can only return the plaint for presentation to the proper Court under O. 7, R. 10, and cannot act under this rule.[8]

The following are instances of defects which are not formal within this rule.

(1) Where the suit is barred by limitation.[9]

(2) Non-joinder of parties. The defect in this case could be remedied by the addition of the necessary parties.[10]

26. "Other sufficient grounds."—Courts in India have no general power of allowing a suit to be withdrawn with the liberty of suing again, apart from the provisions of the present rule[1-a] and the Court before granting leave under this rule must satisfy itself that the conditions therein specified exist.[1-b] In Watson v. Collector of Rajshaye[1] their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows:—

"There is a proceeding in those Courts called a non-suit, which operates as a dismissal of the suit without barring the right of the party to litigate the matter in a fresh suit; but that seems to be limited to cases of misjoinder either of parties or of the matters in contest in the suit; to cases in which a material document has been rejected because it has not borne the proper stamp, and to cases in which there has been an erroneous valuation of the subject of the suit. In all those cases the suit fails by reason of some point of form, but their Lordships are aware of no case in which, upon an issue joined, and the party having failed to produce the evidence which he was bound to produce in support of that issue, liberty has been given to him to bring a second suit, except in the particular instance that is now before them."

This passage from the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council conclusively shows that the failure of the plaintiff to prove his case is no ground for allowing him to withdraw his suit with the liberty of suing again for the same subject-matter.[2] The object of the rule is not to enable

O. 23, R. 1, Note 26.

The following have been held to be "sufficient grounds" for allowing the plaintiff to withdraw his suit with liberty to sue a fresh:

(1) The omission to file a power-of-attorney.[10]

(2) Evidence being not available, for no fault of the plaintiff's.[11]

(3) The suit being premature and the cause of action accruing pending the suit.[12]

(4) Where the plaintiff has failed to put, in evidence, an important document essential to the success of his case. In this respect there is a distinction between a case where a plaintiff wants to get time in order to produce a large body of fresh evidence to counteract the defendant's evidence and a case where a plaintiff merely wishes to give formal proof of a document.[13]

(5) Where two suits are brought and both are sought to be withdrawn to be consolidated into one and there is an apprehension that the second of the two suits would be barred under O. 2, R. 2.[14]

(6) Where the plaintiff had been misled by the absence of a specific denial in the written statement.[15]

(7) Where a material document has been rejected as not properly stamped.[16]

(8) Where the plaintiff finds that the defendant is absent and that even if a decree is passed it cannot be executed.[17]

(9) For other instances see the undernoted cases.[18]

O. 23, R. 1, Notes 26—27.

In the following cases it has been held that there are no sufficient grounds for allowing the plaintiff to withdraw his suit with liberty:—

(1) Where the parties are ready for trial, and a withdrawal will prejudice the defendant.[19]

(2) Where the plaintiffs are not ready to go on with the case.[20]

(3) Where notices on the heirs of a deceased defendant could not be served.[21]

(4) Where owing to the mistake of the writer who drew up the plaint, some important items were left out.[22]

(5) Where the plaintiff deliberately and grossly undervalues his suit and pays insufficient Court fee.[23]

27. May grant permission.—The Court can pass an order under the rule suo motu. An application by the plaintiff is not necessary.[1] Although the rule does not specifically mention anything about notice, still "it is an elementary rule of universal application and founded upon the plainest principles of justice that a judicial order which may possibly affect or prejudice any party cannot be made unless he has been afforded an opportunity to be heard". Hence, if the Court allows a plaintiff to withdraw his suit with the liberty of bringing a fresh suit on the same cause of action, without giving notice to the defendant, the High Court will interfere in revision.[2] The permission under the rule extends only to one suit. to withdraw his suit with permission to bring a fresh suit, on condition of his paying defendant's costs. He filed the second suit without paying the costs, but paid it afterwards. The second suit was dismissed on the ground of the plaintiff's failure to comply with the condition as to costs. Thereupon the plaintiff tried to bring a third suit. Held, that he was not entitled to do so.[3] O. 23, R. 1, Notes 27—28.

28. Form of permission.—The permission to file a fresh suit need not be express but may be implied from the circumstances under which the order was passed.[1] Where the Court does not wish to grant the application for permission, it can dismiss the application and direct the plaintiff to proceed with the suit and if he fails to do so, it can dismiss the suit for default of prosecution.[2] But the Court cannot refuse the liberty to file a fresh suit and at the same time dismiss the suit.[3] Nor can it merely allow the suit to be withdrawn but refuse the permission to bring a fresh suit.[4] Similarly, an order on such an application granting permission to sue in respect of a portion of the claim only is bad.[5] Directing a new plaint to be filed is also not a legal order to be passed on application under R. 1, sub-R. (2).[6] Similarly an order substituting the plaintiff's assignee on the record and permitting him to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit is not valid.[7] The dismissal of a suit in the form "in which it is brought" does not amount to a permission to sue again.[8]

An application for withdrawal of a suit under R. 1 is a petition chargeable with Court-fee under the Court Fees Act.[9]

Liberty to withdraw two suits in order to bring a consolidated suit.—Where a plaintiff files two suits and then prays for permission to withdraw both the suits with leave to bring a fresh suit in respect of the subject-matter of both the suits so as to obviate any danger of the claim comprised in the second suit being barred by O. 2, R. 2, the application may be granted although in fact, O. 2, R. 2 may not be applicable to the case.[1] See also Note 26, ante.

31. "On such terms as it thinks fit."—A defendant should ordinarily be granted his costs where the plaintiff is granted permission to withdraw the suit with the liberty to bring a fresh suit.[1] Where the payment of costs is made a condition of withdrawal with liberty, the order should limit the time for such payment and should further direct that on default of such payment the suit should stand dismissed with costs.[2] Where such direction has not been given, and the plaintiff fails to pay the costs within the time fixed, there is a conflict of opinion as to whether the second suit is barred. According to the High Courts of Calcutta,[3] Lahore[4] and Patna,[5] the second suit is not barred, whether a date has been fixed for the payment or not or whether or not such payment has been made a condition precedent to the institution of a fresh suit. These decisions proceed on the view that until the costs are paid the original suit itself cannot be deemed to have been withdrawn but must be taken to be pending till such costs are paid, that inasmuch, therefore, as the second suit must be taken to have been filed at the time when the first suit was pending it should be stayed under S. 10 of the Code, and that, when the costs were actually paid the first suit will be deemed to be withdrawn on the date of such payment and the second suit can be proceeded with. The Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur has held that where a suit is allowed to be withdrawn with liberty on payment of costs before the institution of the fresh suit, the failure to pay such costs is only an irregularity which does not entail ipso facto a dismissal of the suit, and that, if the costs were paid before the hearing, the irregularity is cured.[5-a] The Calcutta view as to the original suit being pending till the costs are paid was not accepted by this Court. According to the High Courts of Allahabad,[6] Bombay[7] and Madras[8] the costs must, where the time for payment is specified, be paid before the specified date, or, where no time is specified, before the institution of the suit; otherwise, the second suit will be barred. According to this view, the permission means a permission to bring a fresh suit and not a permission to withdraw from the first suit, and that the first suit does not continue pending till the costs are paid, but is withdrawn immediately on the order for withdrawal. O. 23, R. 1, Notes 31—32.

Where it is impossible for the plaintiff to pay the costs within the time fixed, it has, however, been held that the Court could extend the time for such payment.[9]

Where a plaintiff suing for redemption is allowed to withdraw his suit with liberty to sue again within two years from the date of the withdrawal but sues after the expiry of the two years, his suit is not barred, provided it is within limitation. It is not open to the Court in which the first suit is instituted to curtail the period of limitation which the law allows to the plaintiff within which to bring his second suit for redemption.[10]

32. Fresh suit must be between the same parties.—The bar under this rule applies only if the second suit is between the same parties as the first suit.[1] Thus where the second suit is against a different defendant it is not barred under this rule.[2] Similarly, the withdrawal without the leave of the Court of a suit by a Hindu reversioner, challenging an improper alienation by a Hindu widow, is no bar to another suit by another presumptive reversioner for the same purpose as the reversioners do not claim through each other.[3]

33. Same subject-matter.—Sub-R. (3) provides that where a plaintiff withdraws his suit without the permission of the Court under sub-R. (2), he shall be debarred from bringing a fresh suit in respect of the same subject-matter. The term "subject-matter" means the plaintiff's cause of action for his suit[1] and a suit on a different cause of action is therefore not barred under this rule[2] even though the suit may relate to the same property.[3] Conversely, a suit based on the same cause of action as the first one is barred.[4]

(1) A suit for declaration of title to a war bond is a bar to a suit for the recovery of the bond.[5]

(2) A suit for recovery of plots A and B and which is withdrawn with reference to plot B will bar a second suit for recovery of plot B as the cause of action with reference to both the plots is the same.[6]

(3) A suit for the ejectment of the defendant as a trespasser will not bar a second suit for the ejectment of the same defendant as a tenant, after notice to quit.[7]

(6) Where a suit is withdrawn in view of a compromise between the parties, a subsequent suit to enforce the terms of the compromise is not barred.[10]

(7) On the attachment of a house in execution of a decree, the plaintiff sued to establish her title. Meanwhile the executing Court refused to confirm the sale. Thereupon the plaintiff withdrew her suit. But the sale was afterwards confirmed in appeal. Held, that a fresh suit by the plaintiff was not barred as there was a fresh cause of action.[11] O. 23, R.1, Notes 33—35.

(8) The withdrawal of a suit for possession is no bar to the institution of a suit for rent.[12]

(9) The withdrawal of a suit for partition is no bar to a fresh suit for partition by the same plaintiff and of the same property, as the cause of action for a suit for partition is a recurring one.[13]

For other instances, see the undermentioned cases.[14]

34. Additional relief in fresh suit.—The withdrawal of a suit without the permission of the Court to institute a fresh suit operates as a dismissal thereof. Hence O. 2, R. 2 will be a bar to the institution of any suit in respect of any portion of the claim which the plaintiff may have omitted in the previous suit in such a case.[1] But where the withdrawal is with the Court's permission to bring a fresh suit, O. 2, R. 2 is no bar to the inclusion in the second suit of any portion of the plaintiff's claim or of any relief which the plaintiff might have but did not include in his first suit.[2] When a suit is withdrawn with permission to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action, it is not necessary to allege in the subsequent suit the same title as in the first.[3]

35. Effect of withdrawal without permission.—The effect of the withdrawal of a suit without the Court's permission to bring a fresh suit is to debar the plaintiff from filing such a suit.[1] Thus, where a plaintiff unconditionally withdraws his suit in view of the matter in dispute being referred to arbitration, he cannot subsequently sue again in respect of such matter

although the arbitration may have become infructuous.[1-a] The fact that the plaintiff states at the time of withdrawal that he reserves to himself the liberty of bringing a fresh suit does not remove the bar under the rule.[2] Even the defendant's consent to the withdrawal of the suit at the time of such withdrawal would not remove the bar under the rule.[3] But an illegal order for withdrawal without liberty being reserved to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit, does not bar a fresh suit.[4] Similarly where the second suit has been already filed at the time of the withdrawal of the first suit, the withdrawal does not bar the trial of the second suit.[5] The rule merely bars a remedy but does not extinguish the right.[6]

Where the suit property is partly within the Court's jurisdiction and partly without, the withdrawal of the suit with reference to the former portion is no bar to the continuance of the suit with reference to the latter.[7]

36. Erroneous order granting permission.—An order for withdrawal of a suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit, contrary to the provisions of this rule, cannot be treated as an order made without jurisdiction; such order is consequently not null and void, and a fresh suit instituted upon leave so granted is not incompetent. Further the Court trying the subsequent suit is not competent to enter into the question whether the Court which granted the plaintiff permission to withdraw his first suit had properly made such order.[1] The following cases[2] in which a contrary view was held are not good law. But where there are a number of plaintiffs and the Court allows some of them alone to withdraw the suit without the consent of the others, the Court acts without jurisdiction and there should be deemed to be no withdrawal at all within O. 23, R. 1.[8] O. 23, R.1, Notes 36—39.

37. Effect of reversal of order granting permission.—Where after a fresh suit is filed, the order permitting the withdrawal of the previous suit with leave to institute a fresh suit is reversed by the High Court in revision, the proper procedure is to declare the fresh suit null and void and to direct the lower Court to go on with the first suit from the stage at which the order set aside was passed.[1]

38. Power of Court of Small Causes to allow withdrawal.—A Presidency Small Cause Court which, after dismissing a suit has granted a new trial, is seized of the case, not as a Court of revision but as an original Court and can allow the suit to be withdrawn under this rule.[1] But where a decree has been passed in favour of the plaintiff contingent on the opinion of the High Court on a certain question which is referred to it and the High Court decides against the plaintiff, the suit cannot be permitted to be withdrawn with liberty to sue again. The Small Cause Court must pronounce judgment in favour of the defendant.[2]

39. Appeal.—No appeal lies from an order allowing withdrawal of a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit. Such an order is neither a decree nor an appealable order under S. 104 or O. 43, R. 1.[1] Nor does an appeal lie from an order as to costs under this rule.[2] Where the Court refuses to permit a suit to be withdrawn with liberty to sue again, its order, is not one affecting the decision of the case within the meaning of S. 105 and is therefore not open to attack in the appeal from the decree in the suit.[3] But where a Court while dismissing a suit reserves a right to institute a fresh suit, an appeal lies from the former part of the decree because the appeal in such a case is not from an "order" but from a decree.[4] So also, where the trial Court allows a suit to be withdrawn and, on the defendant appealing, the lower appellate Court sets aside the order and dismisses the plaintiff's suit, the order of the lower appellate Court amounts to a decree and is appealable to the High Court.[5]

40. Letters Patent Appeal.—An order of a single Judge of a High Court refusing to set aside in revision an order of the lower Court allowing a plaintiff to withdraw his suit with the liberty of bringing a fresh suit is a "judgment" within the meaning of Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent and hence, is appealable.[1] So also, an order of a single Judge of a High Court allowing the withdrawal of a suit with leave to sue afresh is a judgment and is appealable as such.[2]

41. Revision.—An order allowing a withdrawal of a suit with liberty to sue afresh is a decision of a case within the meaning of S. 115,[1] and is therefore open to revision if it is made on grounds not covered by O. 23, R. 1.[2] Similarly, if the lower Court has not exercised a judicial discretion or has not applied its mind at all to the question, in ordering a suit to be withdrawn with liberty, the High Court can interfere in revision on the ground that the lower Court's order is vitiated by material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction.[3] For this purpose, it has been held that if the lower Court orders a suit to be withdrawn with leave to sue afresh, without giving any reasons, it acts with material irregularity and its order is liable to be set aside in revision.[4] But where the lower Court has exercised a judicial discretion and allowed a suit to be withdrawn and the

O. 23, R. 2. Note 1.

Synopsis.

1. Limitation.

Applicability to execution proceedings. See Rule 4 below.

Suit filed with leave under Cl. 12 of Charter. See Note 1, F.-N. (4).

1. Limitation.—Under the present rule, a plaintiff withdrawing a suit under O. 23, R. 1 with liberty to sue again and instituting a fresh suit is not entitled to deduct from the period of limitation applicable to his second suit the time taken up by the withdrawn suit.[1] Section 14 of the Limitation Act does not apply where a suit is withdrawn by a plaintiff.[2] The rule provides that the law of limitation shall apply in the same manner as if the prior suit had not been brought. Hence a plaintiff is not deprived of the benefit of S. 31 of the Limitation Act merely because he has withdrawn a prior suit relating to the same subject-matter under O. 23, R. 1.[3] This rule applies only to a suit withdrawn under R. 1 but that rule also does not apply except to cases properly pending in a Court in which the leave is granted. Therefore, where a Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit, its order granting leave to withdraw a suit with the liberty does not fall within R. 1. Hence this rule does not apply to such a case and S. 14 of the Limitation Act is applicable.[4]

Further the present rule applies only where a period is fixed by the law of limitation. Hence, where a plaintiff who is required by the order of a Revenue Court to institute a suit within three months, does so within the three months but withdraws the suit with liberty to sue again, his subsequent suit brought on the basis of such liberty is not barred though it may be instituted after the expiry of three months from the Revenue Court's order.[5]

O. 23, R. 3.

R. 3. [S. 375.] Where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court[6] that a suit has been adjusted[7] wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise,[8] or where the defendant satisfies the plaintiff[16] in respect of the whole or any part of the subject-matter of the suit, the Court shall order such agreement, compromise or satisfaction to

1. Legislative changes.—

1. The words 'where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that' are new. See Notes 2 and 6 below.

2. The words 'the Court shall order such agreement, compromise or satisfaction to be recorded' have been substituted for the words "such agreement, compromise or satisfaction shall be recorded". This makes it clear that in every case of compromise decree, there should be an order recording the compromise from which an appeal is provided by O. 43, R. 1 (m).

3. The words at the end of S. 375 'such decree shall be final so far as it relates to so much of the subject-matter of the suit as is dealt with by the agreement, compromise or satisfaction' have been omitted and a new sub-Section has been added to S. 96, providing that no appeal lies from a consent decree.

2. Scope of the rule.—After the institution of a suit it may be adjusted by the parties either wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise. The defendant may also satisfy the plaintiff in respect of the whole or any part of the subject-matter of the suit. In such cases, on the application of the parties the Court shall order such agreement, compromise or satisfaction to be recorded, and shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit. Where the agreement or compromise relates to matters entirely extraneous to the suit, no decree can be passed in terms of such agreement or compromise under this rule.

The Court must be satisfied that there has been a lawful agreement or compromise: and when one of the parties disputes the legality of the compromise or agreement, the Court should investigate the matter, and, if it finds that there has been a lawful compromise, should pass a decree in terms thereof so far as such compromise relates to the suit.

The word "compromise" is more comprehensive than the word "agreement". It means an adjustment of claims in dispute by mutual concessions, and also a mutual promise of two or more parties at difference, to refer the ending of their controversy to arbitrators.[1]

3. Applicability to Revenue Courts.—The rule applies to revenue as well as civil proceedings.[1] It does not however apply to proceedings for the appointment of common manager under S. 93 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.[2] Nor does it apply to a rent suit under that Act, though a compromise in such suits can be recorded by the Court under S. 147-A of that Act which is identical in terms with this rule.[3] The rule does not, likewise, apply to proceedings under some other Special Acts.[4]

4. Applicability to mortgage suits.—The rule applies also to suits on mortgages, so that it is open to the Courts to decree such suits on terms settled between the parties, instead of in the form directed by O. 34, R. 4.[1] Similarly, the proceedings for a final decree after the preliminary decree has been passed, are proceedings in suit and can be compromised.[2] But a mere agreement to extend the time given by the preliminary decree for the payment of the mortgage money does not amount to an adjustment of the suit.[3] This rule cannot be extended by analogy to proceedings under S. 83 of the Transfer of Property Act.[4] O. 23, R. 3, Notes 4—6.

5. Applicability to divorce suits.—Where a decree nisi has been passed in a suit for dissolution of marriage it is competent to the Court, where the parties consent, not to make the decree absolute.[1]

6. "Where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court."—These words are new. Under the old Code there was a conflict of decisions as to whether where a compromise was alleged by one party and denied by the other, or where one of the parties to the compromise was not willing to abide by the compromise, the Court had the power to record the compromise and pass a decree thereon. On the one hand it was held by the High Courts of Madras,[1] Calcutta[2] and Bombay,[3] the Chief Court of Punjab[4] and the Judicial Commissioners' Courts of Nagpur[5] and Oudh[6] that the Court had the power to enquire into the matter, to record it if proved, and to pass a decree thereon; on the other hand, it was held by the High Court of Allahabad that under S. 375, the Court could record a compromise and pass a decree thereon only when at the time of moving the Court the parties were agreed as to the compromise and the decree to be passed on it.[7] The present rule makes it clear that the Legislature has adopted the former view, viz., that the Court has jurisdiction in the case of a dispute between the parties as to the compromise, to enquire into, and decide, whether there has been a lawful compromise in terms of which the suit should be decreed.[8] As to whether and when appeal lies from a decree passed under such circumstances, see Note 15 to S. 96, ante.

It is open to the Court to decide the matter by taking evidence in the usual way or upon affidavits.[9] The agreement compromising the suit may be written or oral,[10] and may be proved by oral[11] or documentary, evidence. The compromise need not be presented by the parties themselves.[12] A compromise otherwise unobjectionable is not vitiated by the want of signature of a party.[13] A compromise disallowed by the Court cannot be again set up in execution of the decree in the suit.[14]

7. "Has been adjusted."—In order that the rule may apply, there must be a completed agreement between the parties[1] and the agreement must amount to an adjustment, in whole or in part, of the suit.[2] The following cases will show when a suit can be said to be adjusted and when not:—

(1) Where a case is adjourned on the ground that the parties contemplated compromising the matter out of Court, there is no adjustment of the suit within this rule.[3]

(2) Where parties agree that the suit should be disposed of in one way if a certain simple fact was found to exist and in another way if it was found not to exist, it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that it amounts to an adjustment of the suit.[4] The High Court of Allahabad has taken a contrary

(3) An agreement between the parties to a suit to abide by the final decision which may be made in another proceeding amounts to an adjustment when that decision is actually passed.[5]

(4) (a) An agreement between the parties that a dispute is to be settled in one way or the other in accordance with the statement of a third person is an adjustment.[6]

(b) But an agreement between the parties to refer their disputes to a third party's decision and abide by his terms is not an adjustment, till the terms are stated and accepted.[7]

(c) When a dispute is referred by the parties to a third party's decision there is a locus penitentiae to withdraw from such agreement till the third party functions.[8]

(5) A compromise which either party has the option of repudiating afterwards is not an adjustment of the suit.[9]

(6) An agreement to abide by the decision of the Court whether right or wrong amounts to a compromise within this rule.[10]

(7) An agreement for making the decision of Court depend on contingencies beyond the control of parties is not an adjustment[11] while, it will be an adjustment if the contingency is within the power of the parties themselves.[12]

(8) The abandonment of an issue does not amount to a compromise.[13]

(9) It has been held by the Allahabad High Court that any agreement that the suit should be decreed if a certain witness eats food served by the plaintiff is binding on the parties and if the witness eats the food the suit should be decreed as per the agreement.[14] In the above case it was held that the present rule did not apply to it. In an earlier case of the same High Court it was held that such an agreement concluded the matter only with reference to one of the issues in the case, viz., that of legitimacy and that the other issues should be tried on the merits.[15] According to the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court such an agreement does not constitute an adjustment within this rule but the agreement and its performance would be evidence on the issue of legitimacy.[16]

8. "By any lawful agreement or compromise."—The rule restricts the power of the Court to record agreements, or compromises to such agreements, as are lawful and the Court is therefore bound to enquire into the question whether the compromise it is asked to record is a lawful one or not.[1] If a part of the compromise is unlawful and it can be separated from the rest, the Court can record that portion of the compromise which is lawful.[2]

The expression "lawful" refers to the legality of the terms of the agreement and not to its binding character. Therefore, an agreement or compromise may be lawful within this rule although it may not be binding on one of the parties on the ground of its having been brought about by coercion, undue influence or fraud.[3] death it was held by the Chief Court of Oudh that the compromise was not unlawful.[12]

A compromise containing an agreement for the withdrawal of a prosecution for a compoundable offence,[13] or for allowing a relief which is barred by limitation,[14] is not unlawful. Nor is a compromise unlawful merely because the parties do not get the shares to which they would be legally entitled[15] or because it contains a penal provision.[16]

9. Submission to award, if a valid adjustment.—Under the old Code it was held that where the parties to a pending suit referred the matter to arbitration the award could be filed as an adjustment under this rule.[1] The present Code, however, contains a new section namely S. 89 which provides as follows:—

"Save in so far as is otherwise provided by the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, or by any other law for the time being in force all references to arbitration whether by an order in a suit or otherwise, and all proceedings thereunder shall be governed by the provisions contained in the second schedule."

The question has arisen whether, in view of this section a submission to arbitration by parties without the intervention of the Court and the award passed by the arbitrators on such submission can be filed as an adjustment by way of compromise under this rule. On this question there is a conflict of opinion. According to the High Courts of Calcutta[2] and Lahore[3] the words "any other law in force" cannot include the provisions of the Code itself, and, therefore, cannot include the provisions of O. 23, R. 3, that, therefore, such a matter in view of S. 89 must be governed only by the provisions of the Second Schedule, and that the submission and the award cannot be filed as an adjustment under this rule. On the other hand, the High Courts of Allahabad,[4] Madras,[5] Patna[5-a] and Rangoon,[6] the Chief Court of Oudh[7] and the Judicial Commissioners' Courts of Nagpur[8] and Sind[9] are of the opinion that the words "any other law in force" include the provisions of O. 23, R. 3 and that therefore such submission and award can be filed as an adjustment by way of a compromise within the meaning of this rule. The High Court of Bombay has reached the same conclusion but on a somewhat different reasoning. According to it the words "any other law in force" mean only any other law of arbitration for the time being in force, such as S. 152 of the Companies Act or Ss. 43 to 45 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act or of the Co-operative Societies Act or the general Law of Contracts whereby parties may agree to refer their disputes to arbitration, and that it does not include O. 23, R. 3. It is however of opinion that the words in S. 89 of the Code "shall be governed by the provisions of the Second Schedule" are totally inapt to convey a prohibition and that they mean no more than that in those arbitrations which are dealt with by Second Schedule the procedure of that Schedule shall be followed: Where, therefore, a submission and award are not covered by the provisions of the Second Schedule as where the reference is made in a pending suit without the intervention of the Court, S. 89 has no application at all and the award can therefore be recognised as an adjustment of the suit by way of compromise under this rule.[10] In a recent case of the Bombay High Court,[11] Rangnekar, J., sitting as a single Judge, was inclined to agree with the Calcutta view. The observations were, however, obiter. Where both the parties accept the award of the arbitrators, the award becomes a compromise and can be recorded under this rule.[12]

O. 23, R. 3, Note 9.

The Court acting under O. 23, R. 3 (in cases where it has been held that an award can be pleaded in a compromise), can enquire into any alleged misconduct of the arbitrator.[13] Further, if a party does not raise any objection to the recording of a submission and award as a compromise under this rule he is estopped from questioning the Court's power to do so.[14] But a mere agreement to refer to arbitration has been held not to be a compromise within this rule.[15] Nor can an award under an invalid reference be accepted as a compromise or adjustment under this rule.[16]

10. Agreement to take oath.—The Oaths Act does not provide for the adjustment of a suit in an arbitrary way by the oath of a party: Hence, an agreement to be bound by the oath of the opposite party does not amount to an adjustment of the suit but the oath amounts only to a conclusive proof, as against the party agreeing to be bound, of the matter stated.[1] Similarly, if a party has agreed that if he fails to take a certain oath the suit should be decreed or dismissed, his failure to take the oath does not justify the disposal of the suit under the present rule. Under S. 12 of the Oaths Act the Court can only record the failure to take the oath and the reasons given for such failure and proceed with the suit.[2]

11. Compromise of probate proceedings.—A compromise between an applicant for probate of a will and a caveator which aims at excluding proof of the genuineness of the will is opposed to public policy which requires that the question of the genuineness of a will should be decided only by the Court. Hence, such a compromise is unlawful and probate cannot be granted merely on the basis of such a compromise and without proof of the will in some form or other.[1] It is open to a caveator who has entered into such a compromise to resile from it and to require due proof of the will.[2] In the same way an executor who withdraws his application for probate in pursuance of a compromise is not debarred from filing another application for probate.[3]

12. Compromise of suit under Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act.— Parties to a suit under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act can enter into a compromise under this rule.[1] A compromise decree in such a suit is not unlawful merely because it is not in accordance with S. 15-B of the Act.[2] But even where a defendant admits the whole of the plaintiff's claim, this rule does not oust the jurisdiction of the Court under S. 12 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act to go behind the transaction and examine whether the admission is true and made by the debtor with a full knowledge of his legal rights against the creditor.[3]

13. Compromise pending arbitration.—A compromise entered into pending arbitration proceedings without the intervention of the Court is valid.[1] Proceedings under Sch. II, para. 17[2] or under para. 20[3] can be validly compromised. But where an arbitration is held on an order of reference by the Court, then, unless the arbitration is superseded, the parties cannot validly enter into any compromise.[4] The mere fact that the time fixed for making the award has expired does not amount to supersession of the arbitration.[5] But it has been held by the Lahore High Court that even after a reference to arbitration through the Court, the parties can validly compromise the disputes under the present rule.[6] In a Madras case, where the Court recorded a compromise under the present rule after the expiry of the time fixed for the making of the award by the arbitrator, it was held that the Court should be deemed to have superseded the arbitration.[7] An agreement not to dispute an award may be said to be a lawful adjustment of the suit within O. 23, R. 3.[8]

14. Compromise of guardianship proceedings.—A guardian appointed by the Court cannot be removed by a compromise as it would have the effect of withdrawing from the jurisdiction of the Court the question of the welfare of the minor and would defeat the provisions of Ss. 40 and 42 of the Guardians and Wards Act.[1]

15. Pre-decree agreements in bar of execution.—An agreement between the parties to a suit entered into before the decree is passed to treat the decree as not executable wholly or partly cannot be given effect to by the executing Court.[1] But an agreement not to execute the decree in whole or in part, entered into after the decree is passed is valid and binding.[2]

16. "Where the defendant satisfies the plaintiff."—In an old case of the Punjab Chief Court it was held that a Court cannot dispose of a suit according to a compromise if the plaintiff professes himself merely satisfied aliunde and that the defendant must have satisfied the plaintiff.[1] It is submitted that this view will hold good even now but that the "defendant" includes his agents also.

17. "Shall order such agreement, compromise or satisfaction to be recorded".—The provision requiring the Court to order that the compromise be recorded is not a mere matter of form but is one of substance as the aggrieved person has right of appeal against such an order under O. 43, R. 1 (m) of the Code.[1] In the absence of an order directing the compromise to be recorded there can be no valid executable decree[2] as the rule makes it obligatory on the Court to record a compromise duly entered into by the parties to a suit.[3] The Court cannot refuse to record the compromise merely because the Court considers it too favourable to one side[4] or that the working of it would give trouble.[5]

It has been held by the Madras High Court[6] and the Chief Court of Punjab[7] that till judgment is delivered in open Court, the Court has jurisdiction to record a compromise. In a Calcutta case[8] where an appeal had been dismissed for default, both parties being absent and they then presented a petition asking that the case should be decreed in terms thereof, it was held that the Court ought to restore the case giving effect to the petition of compromise. Where an ex parte decree is set aside, by suit on the ground of fraud, the original suit is restored as on the date of the ex parte decree and any compromise entered into before the decree should be recorded.[9] But there can be no consent decree unless the case has come on the cause list of the Court.[10]

Where, a plaintiff, in pursuance of a compromise merely asks for a withdrawal of suit the Court is not bound to record the compromise.[11] Where the parties enter into a compromise outside Court, but a compromise decree is not duly passed under this rule, and a decree is passed in the usual way, the terms of the agreement between the parties cannot be enforced.[12] If the Court's order does not embody the whole compromise but embodies only a portion of it, the compromise is not enforceable.[13] But the rule does not require that the order should set out the compromise verbatim. It is enough if the terms of the compromise are indicated with sufficient clearness.[14] An order of adjournment incidentally noting the fact of an agreement made out of Court between the parties as a ground of adjournment is not a record of the compromise.[15] Where the claim is beyond the jurisdiction of the Court it cannot pass a compromise decree. It can only return the plaint under O. 7, R. 10.[16]

18. "Shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit".—A decree on a compromise under this rule can be passed only so far as it relates to the suit.[1a] The question whether particular term of a petition of compromise relates to the suit must be decided from the frame of the suit, the relief claimed and the relief allowed by the decree on adjustment by lawful agreement. The mutual connection of the different parts of the relief granted by a consent decree is an important element for consideration in each case in deciding whether any portion of the relief is within the scope of the suit. No hard and fast rule can be laid down and each case must be governed by its own facts.[1] Where the suit is merely for the recovery of specific properties the compromise must relate to such properties only. But where the suit is not merely for the recovery of the property, but to establish particular rights, the facts have to be looked at as a whole to decide whether matters that do not relate to the suit have been introduced. In such cases, all terms which form the consideration for the adjustment of the matters in dispute, whether they form the subject-matter of the suit or not, become related to the suit, and can be embodied in the decree.[2]

The following are instances in which the compromise was held to "relate to the suit" within the meaning of this rule:—

(1) The compromise of a suit for a money decree may provide for a charge being created on the defendant's immoveable property for the payment of the amount agreed on.[3]

(2) The compromise of a suit for a declaration may include a term for the payment of a sum of money by one of the parties to the others.[4]

(3) The parties to a claim suit under O. 21, R. 63 may compromise it by agreeing that the defendant (decree-holder) should relinquish his right to the property and the plaintiff (claimant of the attached property) should execute in his favour a mortgage for the decree amount.[5]

(6) A and B, a lessee from A, sued C asserting A's title to certain land. The suit was compromised by providing that C, the defendant, should recognise the lease granted by A to B and that, in consideration for this, was to be entitled to a half share of the rent paid by B. Held, that the compromise was one relating to the suit.[8]

(7) See also the undernoted case.[9]

The following are instances in which the compromise was held not to "relate to the suit":—

(1) A consent decree in a partition suit between brothers cannot deal with the rights in the mother's share after her death.[10]

(2) Plaintiff claimed a certain sum with interest at 9½ per cent. per annum. The suit was compromised by the defendant agreeing that he would pay a smaller sum within a fixed time and that on default he would pay the amount with interest at a very much higher rate. Held, that the stipulation as to the higher rate of interest did not relate to the suit.[11]

(3) A suit for damages for crops misappropriated was compromised by the amount of damages being settled and also by a provision being made that the defendant should hold the land under the plaintiff at a certain rent. Held, that the agreement as to tenancy was outside the scope of the suit.[12]

(4) Plaintiff sued to restrain the defendant from building a house in such a way as to interfere with the plaintiff's enjoyment of light and air. The suit was compromised by providing that the defendant should not build his house higher than it originally was and also that the defendant should not let water into the passage between the houses. Held, that the agreement as to the passage was beyond the scope of the suit.[13]

O. 23, R. 3, Notes 18—19.

Although it is obligatory upon a Court, under this rule, to pass a decree in terms of a compromise, after it has been recorded, it is not necessary that the decree should be passed simultaneously with the order recording the compromise. There is nothing to prevent the Court from postponing the passing of a decree in a proper case.[14] Also, the Court is not bound to pass a decree in the exact form which the parties propose.[15] Further, the decree is not vitiated merely because it does not recite verbatim the compromise.[16] A Court acting under this rule cannot make a declaratory decree inasmuch as not having heard the case on the merits, the Court is not in a position to form its own opinion as to the merits of the case.[17] As the decree should be in accordance with the compromise, where the latter does not provide for a personal remedy, the decree also cannot grant it.[18] If a suit has been compromised by the original parties thereto, a third party cannot be allowed to intervene and oppose the passing of a decree on the compromise.[19]

19. Where compromise includes matters not relating to the suit.—We have seen that a decree can be passed under this rule only so far as the compromise relates to the suit. But a compromise which includes matters extraneous to the suit is not unlawful[1] and cannot be rejected in its entirety by the Court.[2] Where a compromise comprises matters unconnected with the suit, the proper course for the Court is to recite the compromise as a whole in its decree or in the form of a schedule to the decree for purposes of reference but to restrict the operative part of the decree to those terms of the compromise which relate to the suit. In such a case the decree would be executable only in respect of the matters that relate to the suit.[3] The remaining terms of the compromise, i.e., those which are not incorporated in the operative part of the decree may be enforced by means of a separate suit.[4]

Where a compromise which includes matters extraneous to the suit has been entered into on condition that it should be given effect to as a whole, the Court should not dismiss the suit,[5] but can permit the parties to suitably enlarge the scope of the suit by means of amendment of pleadings, so as to enable the compromise to be passed into a decree.[6] O. 23, R. 3, Notes 19—20.

As to whether where a decree erroneously includes in the operative part of it, terms extraneous to the suit, the executing Court can refuse to execute the decree with respect to those terms and whether a separate suit lies in respect of them, see Note 27 below.

20. Parties to the compromise.—A compromise to which some of the parties to a suit alone are parties is not necessarily invalid[1] though on good cause being shown by any of the other parties, the Court has a discretion to reject such a compromise.[2] Thus where a partial compromise would be prejudicial to the interests of the parties not joining it, it cannot be recognised.[3] Similarly where the interests of the several parties to a suit are inseparable, it is not open to some of them alone to compromise the matter.[4] Thus a suit for partition cannot be compromised by some of the parties to it alone.[5]

A compromise between some parties alone cannot affect the position of the other parties to the suit. They are neither bound by it nor entitled to enforce it.[6] Nor is a party bound by the unauthorised compromise entered into by his agent.[7] But a person who is suing or is being sued in a representative capacity can enter into a bona fide compromise and thereby bind the persons represented.[8]

O. 23, R.3, Notes 20—24.

Where a compromise includes, as parties thereto, some persons who are not parties to the suit and the terms affecting the parties to the suit are not separable from those affecting the non-parties, the Court cannot pass a decree under O. 23, R. 3.[9] Where a consent decree between some of the parties alone is sought to be enforced in execution against the other parties to the suit who, however, are not parties to the compromise and such persons object to the execution of the decree against them on the ground that the consent decree is not binding on them, the dispute falls within S. 47 of the Code.[10]

A purchaser pendente lite is bound by a compromise decree.[11]

Effect of consent decree and admissibility in evidence.—As has been seen in Note 114 to S. 11 a compromise decree does not operate as res judicata though it will create an estoppel between the parties, and is as much binding upon them as a decree in invitum.[1] Hence, a compromise decree is admissible in evidence in a later suit between the same parties, for the same purposes for which an ordinary decree would be admissible under the provisions of the Evidence Act.[2] Where a suit is terminated by a compromise decree, a breach of its terms does not restore the parties to the rights which they had prior to the decree.[3] But a compromise decree is a creature of the agreement on which it is based and is subject to all the incidents of such agreement.[4] A compromise decree is but a contract with the command of a Judge superadded to it.[5] Hence such a decree is of no greater validity than the contract on which it is based.[6] It can therefore be set aside on any of the grounds, such as fraud, mistake, misrepresentation, etc., on which a contract may be set aside (see Note 28, infra). For the same reason, where a compromise decree contains any term which is in the nature of a penalty under the Contract Act, S. 74 or of a forfeiture it is open to the Court to grant relief against the forfeiture incurred under such penal clause.[7] As a minor's contract is void, so a decree on a compromise with a minor is a nullity.[8] See also the undermentioned cases.[9] O. 23, R. 3, Notes 24—25.

Registration if necessary.—Under S. 17 (2) (vi) of the Registration Act before the amendment thereof by Act XXI of 1929, a decree or order of a Court was exempt from registration, even though it may otherwise come within the scope of sub-S. 1 of S. 17 which made the registration of certain types of documents obligatory. Hence, a compromise decree was held exempt from registration,[1] even in cases where the compromise which it embodied affected matters extraneous to the suit.[2] Under the section as amended, a compromise decree comprising properties extraneous to the suit is not exempted from registration under S. 17, sub-S. 2. A compromise in so far as it is not incorporated in a decree, is not exempt from registration if it is otherwise compulsorily registrable.[3]

A petition to the Court, which merely recites the compromise arrived at between the parties and prays for an order recording the compromise does not come within the provisions of the Registration Act regarding compulsory registration of documents[4] even though the compromise may include terms affecting matters extraneous to the suit.[5] Where the compromise does not transfer or declare any rights in immoveable property but merely provides for the temporary management of the property, registration is not necessary.[6] Even where a compromise is compulsorily registrable the doctrine of part-performance applies to such a compromise and where it has been acted upon, parties cannot resile from it.[7] (See S. 53-A of the Transfer of Property Act as amended in 1930.)

O. 23, R. 3, Notes 26—27.

26. Stamp.—A solenamah on stamped paper is not necessary for a compromise decree to be passed under O. 23, R. 3.[1]

See the undermentioned cases.[2]

27. Execution of consent decree.—A consent decree is executable in the same manner as an ordinary decree.[1] Thus, a consent decree providing for the execution of a document by one of the parties may be enforced under O. 21, R. 34.[2] But, where the decree is incapable of execution, as for instance, where it merely creates a charge on property and does not confer the power of sale, a separate suit is necessary to enforce the right created by the decree.[3] Similarly, a decree can be executed only in respect of the terms included in the operative part thereof. Hence, where certain terms of compromise are not included in the operative part of a decree as being concerned with matters extraneous to the suit, such terms cannot be enforced in execution.[4]

With regard to the power of an executing Court to go behind a consent decree the question has arisen with reference to three matters as noted below:—

(1) Where the decree gives effect to an unlawful compromise.—In such a case, the executing Court is entitled and bound to refuse to execute the decree.[5]

(2) Where the operative part of the decree gives effect to terms of a compromise which do not relate to the suit.—On this question there is a conflict of decisions. On the one hand, it has been held by the High Courts of Madras[6] and Allahabad[7] and by the Chief Court of Oudh[8] that the executing Court cannot refuse to execute the decree in such a case. The reason, according to the Madras High Court being that an objection to the decree cannot be allowed to be raised in the executing Court but must be taken by way of appeal.[9] The High Court of Calcutta[10] and the Chief Court of the Punjab[11] on the other hand have held that a decree is inoperative and invalid and cannot be executed in so far as it gives effect to the terms of a compromise not relating to the suit. The High Court of Bombay seems to take the latter view.[11-a]

(3) Where the decree contains any provision in the nature of a penalty.—A compromise decree being of no greater validity than the contract on which it is based, an executing Court can in the exercise of its equitable jurisdiction, relieve against any forfeiture incurred under any penal clause in a consent decree.[12]

It follows from the differences in views noted above that in respect of the terms of a consent decree which do not relate to the suit a separate suit according to the Calcutta High Court can be brought on the contract,[13] while according to the Allahabad High Court the question in such a case is one relating to execution and hence a fresh suit is barred under S. 47 of the Code.[14] Where, however, any terms of a compromise are not embodied in the operative part of a decree the bar of S. 47 cannot apply to a suit to enforce such terms and such a suit will therefore lie.[15]

Where a consent decree orders the sale of any property, it can be executed and the property can be sold without the formality of an attachment.[16] Similarly, a consent decree in a mortgage suit can be executed without any final decree being passed (unlike the case of an ordinary preliminary decree on the mortgage).[17]

See also the undermentioned cases.[18]

28. Mode and effect of setting aside compromise decrees.—No appeal lies from a consent decree [see S. 96 (3) and Note 31 below]. But an appeal lies from an order recording a compromise [O. 43, R. 1 (m)] and when such an order is set aside, the decree based on it also falls to the ground (see Note 31, infra). Apart from this, the two usual methods of setting aside a consent decree are (a) by suit or (b) by review.[1] These two remedies are cumulative and not alternative: so that failure in an application for review is no bar to a suit to set aside the decree.[2]

A consent decree being only the contract between the parties with a command of a judge superadded to it, a suit lies to set aside the consent decree on any of the grounds on which the contract can be set aside, such as fraud, mistake, etc.[3] In appropriate cases, a compromise decree may be set aside by means of an application under O. 9, R. 13. Thus, when such a decree is attacked on the ground that the compromise was not actually entered into by the defendants, that they were not duly served and that they were not present or represented at the trial an application under O. 9, R. 13 is a proper remedy to set aside the compromise decree.[4]

But a consent decree cannot be set aside by rule on motion,[5] or by an application under S. 151.[6]

Parties cannot rescind a consent decree as an ordinary contract by mutual agreement.[8]

When a compromise decree is set aside, both the parties are restored to their original rights in the former suit when the compromise was effected and the suit can be proceeded with from that point.[9]

Ignorance of real facts, when it was within the party's power to know them,[10] or a mistake or an ignorance of law is[11] no ground for setting aside a compromise decree. See also the undermentioned case.[12]

29. Compromise of appeal.—The present rule applies also to appeals and an appellate Court can pass a compromise decree if the appeal is compromised.[1]

30. Compromise of execution proceedings.—See R. 4, infra.

An order recording or refusing to record a compromise is appealable under O. 43, R. 1 (m).[1] It has been held by the High Court of Lahore that that rule applies only where a compromise was actually made but the Court for some reason has refused to record it, and not where it has been found that there has been no compromise at all.[2]

32. Revision.—Although under this rule a Court has power only to record a "lawful" compromise, yet, where it requires evidence to be given

1. History of rule.—There was no provision in the old Code corresponding to the present rule. Hence, there was a conflict of decisions as to whether, by virtue of S. 647 (now S. 141) the provisions relating to this order could be applied to proceedings in execution, some cases holding that they could be so applied[1] and others holding that they could not.[2] This conflict was set at rest by Act VI of 1892 which introduced S. 375-A, into the Code, by which the provisions of the chapter were declared inapplicable to proceedings after the passing of the decree. In 1894, the Privy Council in I. L. R. 17 All. 106[3] decided that irrespective of the changes made by Act VI of 1892, S. 647 (now S. 141) had not the effect of making the provisions of the Code relating to withdrawal and adjustment of suits, applicable to execution proceedings. The present rule states in explicit terms that O. 23 does not apply to execution proceedings.[4] (For fuller information see notes under S. 141, supra.)

2. Effect of the section.—O. 23, R. 1 relating to withdrawal and abandonment of a suit does not apply to execution proceedings. But a decree-holder may apply to have his application for execution dismissed.[1]

The Court has no power to allow an application for execution to be withdrawn with the liberty of bringing a fresh application.[2] Similarly, the withdrawal of an application for execution without the Court's permission to bring a fresh application is no bar to a fresh application for execution.[3] O. 23, R. 3 does not apply to execution proceedings and the Court has no power to pass a consent order in such proceedings.[4] O. 21, R. 2 and S. 47 provide a complete procedure for the adjustment of decrees out of Court.[5] Where a decree leaves the amount of mesne profits to be ascertained in further proceedings, the suit being undisposed of, the parties can enter into a compromise pending the proceedings for the ascertainment of mesne profits.[6] But it has been held by the Rangoon High Court that an agreement between a mortgagor and mortgagee after preliminary decree for sale and before the final decree for sale whereby the mortgagor is to be given an extension of time for the payment of decretal amount falls within O. 21, R. 2 and not under this rule.[7] The High Courts of Patna[8] and Lahore[9] hold that an application to set aside an execution sale, under O. 21, R. 90 is not a proceeding in execution and hence, O. 23, R. 3 applies to such application. According to the Bombay High Court, where a preliminary decree is passed in a suit for partnership accounts and an enquiry is pending before the Commissioner for taking the accounts, the parties can enter into a compromise, as the proceedings before the Commissioner are not proceedings in execution.[10]

Whatever its other effects may be, R. 4 does not in any way affect the rule of estoppel.[11] Thus, where an application for execution is allowed to be dismissed on the basis of a compromise which provides for a fresh application if the compromise was not carried out and where the compromise is broken, the defendant is estopped from contending that as O. 23, R. 3 does not apply to applications for execution, the decree-holder cannot file a fresh application for execution as on the basis of the compromise.[12]

PAYMENT INTO COURT.

O. 24, R. 1, Notes 1—2.

Deposit by defendant of amount in satisfaction of claim.

R. 1. [S. 376.] The defendant in any suit to recover a debt or damages may, at any stage of the suit, deposit in Court such sum of money as he considers a satisfaction in full of the claim.

Synopsis.

1. Scope of the rule.
2. Payment into Court.
3. Suit to recover debt or damages.
4. Suit for injunction.
5. Suits for accounts.
6. "At any stage of the suit."
7. Insolvency of defendant after payment into Court.

Expression of willingness to pay. See Note 2, Pt. (1).

May deposit in Court. See Note 1, Pt. (4) and Note 2, Pt. (1).

1. Scope of the rule.—This rule deals with payments into Court in satisfaction of a claim after the institution of a suit and before decree.[1] Payments made after decree are dealt with by O. 21, R. 1. This rule does not apply to payments made into Court under S. 83 of the Transfer of Property Act, before the institution of the suit,[2] nor to payments made in pursuance of the order of the Court under the provisions of O. 9, R. 13 setting aside an ex parte decree.[3]

The rule contemplates an unconditional deposit of a sum of money in Court by the defendant.[4] This is contrary to the corresponding English rules (O. 22 Rr. 1 and 6), whereunder, a deposit may be made coupled with a denial of liability.

2. Payment into Court.—A mere expression of willingness to pay made in a written statement, is not equivalent to a payment into Court[1] nor is a payment into a post office by a money order, a valid payment under this rule unless and until it reaches the Court's hands.[2] But a payment into Government Treasury under rules, framed by the High Court is a payment into Court.[3] Where moneys in the hands of the defendant were sought to be attached before judgment, and the defendant deposited the same into Court and the attachment was subsequently found not to have been validly made, the money deposited was construed to be a payment under this rule.[4] See also the undermentioned case.[5]

3. Suit to recover debt or damages.—The rule applies to all suits to recover a debt or damages, though there may be other reliefs claimed in the suit.[1] It does not apply to a suit for a return of goods taken or their value.[2]

4. Suit for injunction.—A suit for injunction for obstruction to light and air, is not a suit to recover a debt or damages within the meaning of this rule even though the Court may in a proper case, award damages in lieu of injunction. According to the practice of the High Court of Bombay, however, where a defendant deposits money into a Court in a suit for injunction in satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim and the Court allows damages in lieu of injunction to the extent of the amount deposited, the Court should apply the provisions of Rule 4 in directing the payment of costs.[1]

5. Suits for accounts.—The rule does not apply to suits for accounts.[1] But the Court has, in such suits, the power to direct the payment into Court of admitted sums in the possession of parties liable to account, or of persons in a fiduciary capacity; such a power is not, in any way, controlled by this rule.[2]

6. "At any stage of the suit."—These words show that the payment must be made before decree.[1] Note also the words "in full of the claim".

7. Insolvency of defendant after payment into Court.—According to English law where the defendant pays money into Court admitting liability to the plaintiff, and then becomes a bankrupt, the plaintiff is, in respect of such money, a secured creditor in respect of such amount. When the liability is denied, he is a secured creditor to the extent to which the claim is admitted or proved.[1]

Synopsis.

1. Form of the notice. 2. "Unless the Court otherwise directs."

"Shall be paid to the plaintiff." See Note 2, Pt. (1).

1. Form of the notice.—The words "in writing" which occurred in the old Code have been omitted as unnecessary in view of S. 142 of the present Code under which all notices under the Code should be in writing.

For form of notice, see Appendix H, Form No. 3.

2. "Unless the Court otherwise directs."—The Court has a discretion under this rule to refuse to allow the plaintiff to withdraw the money deposited in Court, but that discretion must be exercised reasonably. "In a case where the money sued for is due on a promissory note, it would be unreasonable in the absence of special circumstances not to allow the plaintiff to take the money out."[1] But where the amount in deposit is claimed by different parties, no party can, without an order of the Court, withdraw the amount.[2] The money deposited to the credit of the plaintiff but not withdrawn by him, should not be treated as the defendant's money and paid over to the person who attaches the same in execution of his decree against the defendant.[3]

It is the practice of the Court to appropriate payment upon a bond first, to the interest due, and then to principal.[4]

R. 3. [S. 378] No interest shall be allowed to the plaintiff on any sum deposited by the defendant from the date of the receipt of such notice, whether the sum deposited is in full of the claim or falls short thereof. O. 24, R.3.

O. 24, R. 3, Notes 1—3.

1. Scope of the rule.—No interest can be claimed by the plaintiff after he receives notice of the payment into Court.[1]

2. Tender without payment.—The general rule is that a creditor is not bound to accept a sum tendered which is less than what is due to him.[1] This rule provides an exception to the general rule in that interest ceases to run on the deposit whether such deposit is in full satisfaction of the claim or falls short thereof. But the plea of tender before action must in order to stop interest be accompanied by a payment into Court after the suit, otherwise the tender is ineffectual.[2] Where the defendant was restrained by an order of injunction not to pay the amount due by him on a bond to the plaintiff, but the Court ordered him to deposit the amount in Court and he did not do so, he was held bound to pay interest from the date of the order.[3] A deposit, in Court, before the due date, of money due upon a bond is not a valid tender of the debt[4] nor is a mere offer to pay the amount.[5] A valid tender, if improperly refused, stops payment of interest.[6]

As to the effect of a tender made to one of two joint promisees, see the cases noted below.[7]

3. Execution proceedings.—This order does not apply to proceedings in execution.[1] But the benefit of this rule has been extended by way of analogy to judgment-debtors and as a result, a decree-holder, who might have, but has not, drawn the amount immediately after its deposit will be disallowed interest, even though the amount deposited is not the full amount due under the decree.[2]

Afterwards A pays the money into Court. B accepts it in full satisfaction of his claim. The Court should also give B his costs of suit, A's conduct having shown that the litigation was necessary.

(c) A owes B Rs. 100, and is willing to pay him that sum without suit. B claims Rs. 150 and sues A for that amount. On the plaint being filed A pays Rs. 100 into Court and disputes only his liability to pay the remaining Rs. 50. B accepts the Rs. 100 in full satisfaction of his claim. The Court should order him to pay A's costs.

Synopsis.

1. "May prosecute his suit for the balance."
2. Apportionment of costs.

1. "May prosecute his suit for the balance."—Where the plaintiff accepts the payment only in part satisfaction of his claim, he is entitled under this rule to prosecute the suit for the balance.[1]

2. Apportionment of costs.—The Court has a discretion under this rule in awarding costs[1] and, in exercising such discretion, the Court ought to find which of the parties is most to blame for litigation.[2] Where, at the settlement of issues, the defendant paid the amount into Court which plaintiff took out in part satisfaction and raised an issue as to damages and subsequently the plaintiff withdrew the suit accepting the same in full satisfaction of his claim, it was held, that the plaintiff was entitled to his costs up to the settlement of the issues.[3]

1. Scope, object and applicability of the Rule.—This rule provides for the taking of security for the costs of the suit and O. 41, R. 10 provides for the taking of security for the costs of the appeal. Security for costs of the suit may, under this rule, be ordered to be given in the following cases:—

(1) Where the sole plaintiff, or where there are more plaintiffs than one, all the plaintiffs reside outside British India and none of them have sufficient immoveable property in British India other than the property in suit;

(2) Where, in a suit for money, the plaintiff is a woman and she does not possess sufficient immoveable property in British India.

In Bidhatree Dassee v. Mutty Lall Ghose[1] Mr. Justice Sale observed as follows:—

> "The object of the section clearly is to provide for the protection of defendants in certain cases, where, in the event of success, they may have difficulty in realising their costs. . . . . But there are cases in which the plaintiff in a suit for money (the claim being real and open to no objection) cannot be rendered liable for the defendant's costs of suit. In illustration I may refer to an administration suit by a creditor or legatee where the claim is admitted, or to a suit on a mortgagee or promissory note where there is no defence. "Is it" to be supposed that it was intended that the defendant, in such cases should be in a position to ask as a matter of absolute right that security may be given for costs that he may choose to incur needlessly?"

And he held that no security should be demanded in such cases, even though the plaintiff is a woman having no sufficient immoveable property within British India. See also the undermentioned cases.[2]

O. 25, R. 1, Notes 1—4.

The provisions of the rule are wide enough to cover the case of every plaintiff, including a minor plaintiff[3] and even though the defendant is himself a resident outside British India.[4] In the case of a pauper plaintiff, however, no security should be ordered to be furnished except in exceptional circumstances, inasmuch as it virtually deprives the plaintiff of the benefit of the order made in his favour under O. 33 of the Code.[5] As to when security for costs can be demanded from infants, see Note 8 below.

The rule does not apply to a reference under the Revenue Jurisdiction Act as there is no suit before the Court.[6] Irrespective of this rule, the High Court may, by S. 26 (3) of the Indian Patents and Designs Act II of 1911 demand security for the costs to be incurred by the opposite party, from the person applying for the revocation of a patent, in proceedings under that Act.[7]

2. Residence outside British India.—"Residence" should be residence under such circumstances as will afford reasonable probability that the plaintiff will be forthcoming when the suit is decided."[1-a] A mere temporary residence at the time of the suit is not "residence" within the meaning of this rule.[1] Thus a resident of a Native State temporarily staying in British India for the purpose of legal proceedings for taking his wife back cannot be said to be "residing" in British India.[2] But where a subject of Bhopal, a Native State, was living for four years at Poona and there was nothing to show that he had come to Poona on a mere temporary purpose, it cannot be said that he resides outside British India.[3] Where there are several co-plaintiffs all of them must reside outside British India; if one of them resides ordinarily within the jurisdiction though a bankrupt, no security will be ordered from any of them.[4] Where a plaintiff leaves the country before the case is decided the proper course for the defendant is to apply to the Court to take security for costs before the case is decided.[5] But security will not be ordered on an affidavit that plaintiff is about to leave the country.[6]

(c) Companies incorporated under the Companies Act.[1]

A Trading corporation ought to have a place of foundation. It may have more than one residence. But it "dwells" at the place where it carries on its general administration business and not where it carries on even a considerable part of its other businesses.[2] See S. 20, Note 3.

5. Immoveable property.—See Note 4, S. 16, ante.

A beneficial interest in a part of the surplus income derived from immoveable property cannot be said to be immoveable property.[1] But a lease is a transfer of an interest in immoveable property and a leasehold interest is therefore itself immoveable property within the meaning of this rule.[2]

6. "The Court may . . . order."—The Court has a discretion under this rule to require or not, security for costs from the plaintiff.[1] There is no rigid rule for the exercise of such discretion, but the Court will not, ordinarily, make an order for security, unless it is shown that the exercise of power is necessary for the reasonable protection of the interests of the defendant.[2] The order should be in the Judge's own handwriting[3] and should contain reasons for ordering such security.[4] No specific sum need, however, be mentioned in the order, for which security should be granted.[4a] A defendant asking that security may be taken from the plaintiff under this rule should not be guilty of delay in making the application.[5] He should supply full information on all necessary points.[6]

An order for security will not be made before the defence has been filed[7] or after the judgment has been passed.[8]

7. Poverty of plaintiff.—The mere poverty or insolvency of the plaintiff is not a sufficient ground for ordering him to give security for costs as a condition precedent to his going on with the suit.[1] "The general rule is" said

Bowen, L.J., in Cowell v. Taylor,[2] "that poverty is no bar to a litigant; that, from time immemorial, has been the rule at Common Law, and also, I believe in equity." There is, however, an exception to this rule introduced for the purpose of preventing abuse, that is, if an insolvent sues as nominal plaintiff for the benefit of somebody else, he must give security; in that case the nominal plaintiff is a mere shadow.[3] Thus, where A, an undischarged bankrupt, and his daughter B sued C for damages for breach of promise of marriage and it was contended by C that the suit was brought really for the purpose of benefiting A out of his daughter's engagement and that the daughter B had no property within British India, it was held that an order for security should be made against A.[4] But an insolvent plaintiff who is bound to hand over the fruits of his suit to the Official Assignee cannot said to be a nominal plaintiff,[5] especially if the insolvent is also to benefit himself by the result of the suit as, for instance, where the suit is in respect of a sum earned by him subsequent to his adjudication and the amount claimed is in excess of the amount of his debt provable in insolvency.[6]

O. 25, R. 1, Notes 7—9.

8. Where plaintiff is a minor.—As has been said already in Note 1 ante, the rule applies to all plaintiffs including minors. But, except in exceptional circumstances, neither a minor nor his next friend should be called upon to give security for costs.[1] A suit on behalf of a minor plaintiff should not be stopped merely on the ground that the next friend is unable to give security of costs. The other parties are sufficiently protected by the power they have in a proper case of moving the Court either to stay the suit as not being for the benefit of the minor or if there is a just cause other than the poverty of the next friend to have him removed.[2]

9. Where the plaintiff is a woman—Sub-rule (3).—It has always been a principle of the law relating to security for costs that persons privileged from legal process can be called upon to give security[1] and this sub-rule has been enacted in view of the provisions of S. 56 of the Code which provides that a woman is exempted from arrest in execution of a decree.[2] The Court has, however, a discretion in the matter and the principle to be adopted in the exercise of such discretion has been thus stated by Mr. Justice Davar in Sonabai v. Tribhuvandas[3]: "I have always been most averse to making orders against a woman for depositing security for the defendant's costs when I find that such an order would embarrass them and hamper them in the conduct of their cases. In the case of poor women, such an order amounts to a denial of justice to them. Unless the suit is on the face of it vexatious, or is one which I feel is filed merely for the harrassment of the defendant, I do not make an order against a woman plaintiff for security for defendant's costs—when she says she is not in a position to give such security and I believe her statement." This principle was approved in a later case[4] by the same High Court though it was recognised that "the discretion given by the rule is one of the most difficult that a Court can be called upon to exercise." In no case will a Court order a female plaintiff to give security unless grounds are shown tending to show that the defence is true.[5]

10. Where leave has been granted to sue as a pauper.—There is a conflict of opinion as to whether security can be ordered against a plaintiff who has been allowed to sue in forma pauperis. On one hand it has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta[1] and Bombay[2] that this rule does not apply to such cases and that the Court has no power to order security against a plaintiff suing in forma pauperis, the reason being that to do so would be to render the leave granted under O. 33, R. 8, nugatory. The High Court of Bombay has further held that where an order is made against the plaintiff for security for costs and subsequently he is granted leave to sue as a pauper, the order as to security ceases to operate, provided the leave is granted before the time limited for giving security has expired.[3] On the other hand, it has been held by the High Courts of Lahore,[4] Madras[5] and Rangoon[6] that the rule is wide enough to cover the case of a pauper plaintiff also, though, as a rule, very special grounds must be shown for granting an order for security for costs against him.

11. Inherent power to order security for costs.—There is a difference of opinion on the question whether apart from the provisions of this rule, the Court can order security for costs against a plaintiff. It has been held in the undermentioned cases[1] that the Court has such power to act in proper cases, as for example, where the plaintiff suing is not the real plaintiff but a mere puppet in the hands of others. A contrary view has however been expressed by Cuming, J.,[2] to the effect that the Court has no inherent power to order security for costs apart from the provisions of this rule.

12. "Suit for the payment of money"—Sub-rule (3).—A suit which, though not exclusively for money, will result in a decree for money on the relief sought, is a suit for the payment of money within the meaning of this rule.[1] Thus a suit to recover possession of certain ornaments and other moveable properties, or in the alternative to obtain a decree for their value is a "suit for the payment of money."[2] Similarly a suit by an actress for damages for wrongful dismissal[3] or a suit on which a claim is made for a share in a partnership business[4] are "suits for payment of money". But the main claim in the suit must be one for money the other reliefs being only incidental. A suit for dissolution of partnership and accounts and for the recovery of stridhanam property[5] or a suit for the administration of an estate consisting largely of immoveable property and in which it may ultimately be necessary to sell the estate and distribute the proceeds in money[6] is not a "suit for the payment of money" within this rule.

13. Claim and cross-claim.—A defendant cannot as a general rule be ordered to give security for costs[1] inasmuch as he is a person compelled to litigate and take proceedings in defence of the claim.[2] But where there is a claim and a counter-claim the position is different. The substantial position of the parties will have to be taken into consideration.[3] If the claim and the cross-claim arise out of the one subject-matter a defendant setting up a cross-claim will not be ordered to give security.[4] If, however, the cross-claim is in respect of a matter wholly distinct from the claim, an order for security may be made.[5] In other words, if the counter-claim is really in the nature of a cross-action, a defendant out of jurisdiction will as a rule be required to furnish security for costs[6]; but if cross-claim arising out of the same subject-matter is, in substance, the defence to the claim, the Court has a discretion to refuse to order such defendant to give security.[7]

14. Appeal.—No appeal lies under the Code from an order under this rule. It is, however, appealable under Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent as a "Judgment".[1] Where the plaintiff deposits in Court security for costs and ultimately the suit is decreed in his favour, the defendant appealing against the decree, is not entitled to an order for detaining in Court, the money deposited by the plaintiff, pending the appeal.[2]

15. Revision.—A Court will be acting "illegally" in the exercise of its jurisdiction in ordering security for costs in a case to which this rule does not apply, as where it orders security for costs in an administration suit which is not a "suit for the payment of money" within this rule.[1] Similarly it will be acting with "material irregularity" in the exercise of its jurisdiction if it orders security for costs against a plaintiff suing as a pauper, in the absence of exceptional circumstances.[2] In such cases, therefore, a revision will lie against the orders so passed.

16. Other cases under the Code where security may be required.—The following are some of the other provisions of the Code under which security may be required by the Court:—

There was no provision for the principal debtor being proceeded against in the first instance. It was held that a failure to execute the decree against B in the first instance, does not amount to a release of the surety's liability.[1]

2. Dismissal under this rule, if res judicata.—A suit dismissed under this rule for failure to furnish security for costs, cannot be said to have been "heard and finally decided" within the meaning of S. 11 of the Code and cannot operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit between the parties.[1] O. 25, R. 2, Notes 2—5.

3. Notice.—The general principle is that no order affecting a party should be made without notice to him.[1]

4. Limitation.—The limitation for an application to set aside a dismissal under this rule is 30 days from the date of the dismissal under Art. 163 of the Limitation Act, 1908.

5. Appeal.—Under the old Code, an order under this rule was held to be a decree and appealable as such.[1] Under the present Code, the order is only an appealable order (see O. 43, R. 1 (n)). No appeal will lie, however, from such an order passed in a suit in which the decree itself is not open to appeal. See S. 104.

O. 26, R.1, Notes 1—2.

1. Scope of the Rule.—The grounds upon which a commission can be issued are specified in this rule and in Rules 4 and 5 below; they ought not to be relaxed or nullified because the witness is a man of rank or is a man of social status[1] and it will be derogatory to him to appear personally in Court.[2]

The Court can issue a commission even after remand.[3] The issue of a commission being a matter of routine, the successor of a Judge has power to cancel the issue of a commission made by his predecessor.[4]

1-a. Applicability to proceedings under other special or Local Acts.—Rules 1 to 8 of this Order, dealing with the issue of commission for the examination of witnesses, have been made applicable to enquiries and proceedings under the undermentioned Acts.[1]

2. May in any suit issue.—The general trend of opinion is that the issue of a commission is a matter of Judicial Discretion.[1] The High Court of Madras, has, however, held, in the undermentioned cases[1-a] that the word "may" must be read as equivalent to "is given authority to" and that a commission should issue as a matter of right unless the application for commission amounts to an abuse of the process of the Court. As a general rule, an application will not be granted unless

(1) The application is made bona fide,

(2) The issue in respect of which the evidence is required is one which the Court ought to try,

(3) The witness to be examined would give evidence material to the issue, and

(4) There are some good reasons why the witness cannot be examined in Court.[2]

But the Court has not the absolute discretion or inherent power to issue a commission except when authorised by the provisions of the Code; nor, according to the general trend of opinion, is the Court bound to issue a commission simply because all the conditions laid down in the rule exist; where the examination on commission may result in manifest injustice to any party, or where it is not calculated to permit of the evidence being tested fairly, or when the application is made to avoid cross-examination before the Court, the Court is not bound to issue a commission.[3] The difference between the examination of a witness on commission and a viva voce examination in open Court is so greatly to the disadvantage, almost invariably, of the opposite party that the Court should very jealously inquire, in every case, into the reason for the commission.[4] The question is, whether the Courts can be said to have acted with jurisdiction in taking away from a litigant the right which he undoubtedly has of having the witness brought before the Court in accordance with the normal procedure.[5] Regard must always be had to the possibility of the witness not being a credible witness in which case the opportunity of noting his demeanour[6] and of hearing the exact and precise answers given by him would be lost.[7] This is specially so in a case where a party accused of fraud, seeks to examine himself on commission.[8] O. 26, R.1, Notes 2—3.

The fact that the witness sought to be examined is interested, or that the case of the party asking for the issue of the commission is improbable[9] or that the Judge thinks that no useful end would be attained by the evidence[10] is however, no ground per se for refusing to issue a commission.

As a matter of practice, notice ought to be given to the opposite party before ordering a commission.[11]

3. "Who is exempted under the Code."—Section 132 of the Code recognises the right of Pardanashin ladies who according to their custom can claim the privilege of being examined on commission.[1] The fact that an allegation of immorality is made against such a lady[2] or that she had appeared on a former occasion in public[3] or in Court,[4] is no ground for refusing to issue a commission. In the undermentioned cases[5] a commission was issued even though the lady was old and had entirely abandoned the purdah.

But where no custom of not appearing in public is made out,[6] or the custom alleged is of a varying and uncertain character,[7] the Court will not issue a commission. A Pardanashin lady is not entitled to decline to be examined on commission at any place other than that of her choice.[8]

A religious preceptor is not entitled to be examined on commission on the ground of his social status.[9]

4. "Who is from sickness or infirmity unable to attend."—In the case of persons who, owing to illness, are unable to attend the Court, a commission ought not to be refused.[1] If sickness or infirmity is alleged, the Court will, of course, have to take into account the character and gravity of the sickness and the risk consequent upon the refusal to issue a commission.[2] Infancy, however, is not a ground for the issue of a commission.[3]

5. Procedure where evidence is taken on commission.—It is the duty of the party obtaining the commission to take all such steps as are necessary to secure the attendance of the witnesses before the commissioner.[1] The examination is on the same footing as that in Court[2] and the opposite party is entitled to cross-examine the witnesses,[3] though where the cross-examination is unnecessarily prolonged or amounts to an abuse of process, the Court can fix a time limit and order the cross-examination to be finished.[4] But the commissioner has no power to disallow questions and rule points as to admissibility of evidence.[5]

Where the commission is for examining a witness on interrogatories, the party is entitled to a copy of the cross-interrogatories filed by the opposite party.[6]

6. Arbitration.—Where a case is referred to arbitration under Schedule II (Section 506 of the old Code), it is competent to the Court to issue a commission under this rule as the suit is, still before the Court.[1] But the Court has no power either under Section 75 or under this rule to issue a commission for examination in the case of private arbitration. The consent of parties cannot confer such power nor can the Court issue a commission in such a case under its inherent powers.[2]

O. 26, R.3, Notes 1—2.

1. Scope of the Rule.—The rule contemplates the issue of a commission to any person for examining a witness or a party residing within its local limits.

But the failure to issue the commission to the Commissioner will not invalidate the examination actually held by him pursuant to the order of the Court; the omission to actually issue the commission is only an irregularity which, if not objected to before the examination commences, will be deemed to have been waived.[1]

2. Deputy Collector, if can delegate an officer of his Court to take evidence on commission.—A Deputy Collector is competent to depute an officer of his Court to examine a witness on commission provided the place where the witness is sought to be examined is within his jurisdiction.[1]

O. 26, R.4. Persons for whose examination commission may issue.

R. 4. [S. 386.] (1) Any Court may in any suit issue a commission for the examination of—

(a) any person resident beyond the local limits of its jurisdiction;

(b) any person who is about to leave such limits before the date on which he is required to be examined in Court; and

(c) any civil or military officer of the Government who cannot, in the opinion of the Court, attend without detriment to the public service.

(2) Such commission may be issued to any Court, not being a High Court, within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such person resides, or to any pleader or other person whom the Court issuing the commission may appoint.

(3) The Court on issuing any commission under this rule shall direct whether the commission shall be returned to itself or to any subordinate Court.

1. Scope of the rule.—The power of the Court is not more restricted under this rule than under rule 1.[1] A party is entitled to the issue of a commission if it is clear that the witness is residing outside the jurisdiction of the Court.[2] It is not for the Court, as has already been pointed out in rule, 1, to decide whether the party will be benefited or not, as it is a matter entirely for the party.[3]

Where a commission is issued to a Court it should be addressed to the Court of first instance within the limits of whose jurisdiction the witness resides.[4]

2. "May issue."—As has been seen in Note 2 to Rule 1, ante the word "May" in this rule as well as in rule 1 has been construed in two decisions of the Madras High Court to mean "is given authority to", and that the issue of a commission is a matter of statutory right.[1] But according to the general trend of opinion, the Court has a discretion to grant or refuse a commission.[2] The discretion must, however, be exercised judicially.[3] (See also Note under the same heading in Rule 1, supra.)

3. Plaintiff asking his evidence to be taken on commission.—The general and accepted rule is that the evidence of a plaintiff in a case ought not to be taken on commission except for very strong reasons.[1] The reason is the plaintiff has had a choice of the forum, and having chosen to institute his suit in a particular Court, he cannot ask for his examination elsewhere.[2]

4. Defendant asking his evidence to be taken on commission.—"But the case is entirely different" observed Mr. Justice Chitty in Ross v. Woodford, (1894) 1 Chancery Division 38. "When it is the defendant's application, and particularly when the defendant is lawfully resident out of its jurisdiction according to the ordinary course of his life and business, and to compel these defendants to come over here at a great expense to attend the trial, or give up their case would be oppressive and unfair, and in my opinion it would be wrong to apply to the case of a defendant the principles, that are applicable to the case of a plaintiff asking for a commission to examine himself".[1] Thus where a suit was instituted in Cuttack against a defendant residing at Colombo, a commission was issued for the defendant's examination at Colombo on the ground that it would be obviously unfair to compel him to come to Cuttack or practically give up his defence.[2]

7. Appeal.—A Full Bench of the High Court of Madras[1] over-ruling two earlier decisions[2] has held that an order under this rule directing or refusing to issue a commission is only an interlocutory order and not a "judgment" within Cl. (15) of the Letters Patent and is not appealable. The High Courts of Bombay,[3] Calcutta[4] and Rangoon[5] have also taken the same view as that of the Madras Full Bench.

An order under this rule is not an appealable order. Nor will the appellate Court interfere with the order in the regular appeal from the decree in the suit, unless the discretion is shown to have been improperly exercised which has prejudiced the party aggrieved.[6]

8. Revision.—An order under this rule can be revised when the order is one made without jurisdiction, e.g., in the absence of any of the grounds mentioned in the rule[1] or where the Court has acted with material irregularity, e.g., in refusing to issue a commission to a defendant residing outside its jurisdiction.[2] Where the refusal to issue a commission would Commission or Request to examine witness not within British India.

[1877—S. 387; 1859—Ss. 177, 178.]

Synopsis.

1. Evidence of witnesses not residing within British India.
2. Plaintiff in foreign territory asking for a commission to examine himself.
3. "Letter of request."
4. Revision.

1. Evidence of witnesses not residing within British India.—This rule deals with the issue of a commission for the examination of persons residing outside British India.[1]

Where a commission is issued for taking evidence in England, the Bill of costs with respect to such commission is to be taxed by the taxing Master in India though it is to be taxed on the same principle as would be adopted in England.[2]

2. Plaintiff in foreign territory asking for a commission to examine himself.—As noticed in R. 4, Note 3, the Court will be very reluctant to accede to the request of the plaintiff for the issue of a commission to examine himself abroad except upon very strong grounds. The plaintiff is entitled to choose his own forum and having chosen the forum, he is not entitled to say "I reside outside the jurisdiction. Therefore examine me on commission."[1]

3. "Letter of request."—These words are new. As for the form of letter of request, see Appendix H, Form No. 8.

4. Revision.—Interlocutory orders passed in the exercise of discretion under this rule cannot be revised by the High Court.[1] See also S. 115, ante.

1. Return of commission.—The return should show that the evidence was recorded as the law requires it, viz., in the language in ordinary use in the proceedings before the Court and duly read over and signed by the witness.[1]

The time for the execution of the commission may be enlarged on the application of a party.[2]

2. "Duly executed."—If a party to the suit dies before the examination of a witness on commission is completed and the fact of death is brought to the notice of the Commissioner, the proceedings after death are rendered illegal and consequently the commission cannot be said to have been duly executed.[1]

3. Commissioner can note demeanour of witness.—A Commissioner is entitled by law to note his observation as to the demeanour of the witness examined by him.[1]

1. Legislative changes.—

The words "or is a civil or military officer who cannot in the opinion of the Court attend without detriment to the public service" in Cl. (a) are new.

2. Evidence on commission—When may be read as evidence in the suit.—The practice on the original side of the High Court of Calcutta is that evidence taken on commission does not become evidence in the suit, until the same has been tendered and read as evidence by the party on whose behalf it was taken,[1] while the practice of the moffussil Courts in Calcutta is that such evidence is treated as evidence in the suit, though it is not formally tendered in evidence as it is part of the record.[2]

A party wishing to rely on evidence taken on commission cannot, without the consent of the party against whom he offers it, have it read as evidence in the suit, unless he is able to show that the circumstances mentioned in cl. (a) exist at the time the evidence is sought to be read, or unless he is able to persuade the Court to dispense with the proof of such circumstances.[3] Such evidence can be read at the instance of either party to the suit and not necessarily by the party who applied for a commission.[4]

The fact that the evidence was taken on commission in the absence of the opposite party is no sufficient ground for refusing to admit it in evidence.[5] But if the commission was issued for examining a particular witness and in spite of objection by the other side another witness was also examined, the Court would be justified in ignoring the evidence of such person.[6]

3. Objection to the admissibility in evidence.—Objection to the admissibility of the deposition of witnesses examined in commission should be taken in the trial Court itself.[1]

4. Admissibility of documents.—Where a document is produced before the Commissioner and no objection is taken as to its admissibility, no such objection can be taken after the return of the commission at the time of the trial of the suit.[1] But if the document is objected to before the Commissioner, the party objecting is not precluded from urging other grounds of objection than those taken before the Commissioner at the time of trial.[2]

1. Legislative changes.—

The words "or proceeding" which occurred in the old section, after the words "in any suit" and the words "and the same cannot be conveniently conducted by the Judge in person" have now been omitted.

2. Scope of the rule.—The object of local investigation is not so much to collect evidence which can be taken in Court but to obtain evidence which from its peculiar nature can only be had on the spot[1] and to elucidate any point which is left doubtful on the evidence taken before the Court.[2] Cases of boundary disputes and disputes about the identity of lands are instances when a Court may order a local investigation under this rule.[3]

The Court has a discretion to order a local investigation or not; it is not bound to order it in all cases.[4] An application under this rule should be made at the hearing of the suit.[5] It cannot be made after the case is closed.[6] The presiding officer or officers in enquiries under the following Acts have been empowered to issue commissions for local investigation in accordance with this rule. See the Acts noted below.[7]

3. Local investigation by the Judge.—See O. 18, R. 18, ante.

By S. 144 of the Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), the Court may, in inquiries under that Act, make a local investigation, instead of issuing a commission under this rule.

4. Power of Commissioner to take evidence.—See Note 3, R. 10, infra.

5. "Such person as it thinks fit."—Under the Code of 1859, a commission had to be issued, in the first instance, to an officer of the Court and only when there is no such officer, to any other suitable person.[1] There is no such preference under this rule. Under the General Rules of the Allahabad High Court, however, commissions other than commissions for the examination of witnesses or of accounts, should not be issued to persons other than Civil Court Amins except when such a course is impracticable and, in every case, a person other than a Civil Court Amin is employed, the Court should record its reasons therefor.[2]

The rule does not contemplate the issue of a commission to more than one person. But if more than one is appointed, provision should be made for meeting any difference in opinion that may arise between them.[3]

6. Admissibility of report of Commissioner.—See Note 4, R. 10.

7. Interference with the report.—See Note 10, R. 10.

8. Form.—For the form of commission for local investigation, see Appendix H, Form No. 9.

9. Appeal from order directing local investigation.—An order under this rule is not appealable under O. 43, R. 1. Nor is it a "judgment" within cl. 15 of the Letters Patent.[1] The discretion exercised by the Court under this rule cannot be interfered with in second appeal.[2]

10. Revision.—According to the High Court of Patna, where the order directing a local investigation would be a calamitous waste of time and money and would be determining the rights of parties on an improper basis, the High Court would interfere in revision.[1] But the High Court of Madras in the undermentioned case refused to interfere with an order directing a Commissioner to ascertain the mesne profits on the ground that the applicant had a remedy by way of appeal from the final decree.[2] O. 26, R. 9, Note 10.

R. 10. [S. 393.] (1) The Commissioner, after such local inspection as he deems necessary and after reducing to writing the evidence taken by him, shall return such evidence, together with his report in writing signed by him to the Court. O. 26, R. 10.

Procedure of Commissioner.

(2) The report of the Commissioner and the evidence taken by him (but not the evidence without the report) shall be evidence in the suit[3] and shall form part of the record[4]; but the Court or, with the permission of the Court, any of the parties to the suit may examine the Commissioner personally in open Court touching any of the matters referred to him or mentioned in his report, or as to his report, or as to the manner in which he has made the investigation.

Report and depositions to be evidence in suit.

Commissioner may be examined in person.

(3) Where the Court is for any reason dissatisfied with the proceedings of the Commissioner, it may direct such further inquiry to be made as it shall think fit.

1. Legislative changes.—

The words "or as to his report" have been added in the concluding part of sub-Rule 2. Sub-Rule 3 is new.

2. Scope of the rule.—Sub-rule 2 is "intended to afford protection to the Commissioner who is a quasi-judicial officer and such protection is afforded on grounds of public policy so as to make it impossible for either of the parties to subject the Commissioner to a vexatious examination."[1]

This rule applies to suits under Tenancy Acts.[2]

3. Functions and powers of Commissioner.—The provisions of O. 26 do not amplify S. 75 of the Code and the Court cannot delegate to the Commissioner the trial of any material issue which it is itself bound to try.[1] In other words, a Judge cannot depute to the Commissioner functions which he can and should discharge himself.[2] All that the Court can depute a Commissioner to do is to inspect a disputed land, to prepare a map or to obtain information with regard to physical features of the property inspected.[3] It is not the intention of the Legislature to allow witnesses to be examined by the Commissioner in such cases, unless the nature of evidence is such that it ought to be taken only on the spot.[4] Thus the statements regarding a right of way made by village officers to a Commissioner appointed to prepare a map, are not evidence[5] unless the parties agree and accept the same.[6]

Any evidence taken by the Commissioner contrary to instructions cannot be looked into.[7] Thus where a Commissioner who was appointed to ascertain the amount of mesne profits entered into the question of possession of the land, recorded evidence and arrived at a finding, it was held that the procedure was ultra vires.[8] If evidence is taken by him within the scope of his authority such evidence should be reduced into writing. Information given by witnesses and not reduced to writing is not legal evidence.[9] O.26, R.10, Notes 3—5.

A Commissioner is bound to record the state of things as actually existing and not draw upon his own imagination or make surmises.[10]

Notice should be given to the parties of the time when local investigation will be held.[11]

4. Admissibility of the report of the Commissioner.—The report of the Commissioner together with the evidence, if any, recorded by him is legal evidence in the suit.[1] The Court is not justified in refusing to consider the report unless the local investigation is incomplete or inconclusive.[2]

The report however is not per se evidence in any other suit unless its accuracy is proved in the ordinary way.[3]

5. Examination of the Commissioner.— The parties are entitled to take objection to the report of the Commissioner and substantiate the same by examining the Commissioner or other witnesses.[1] If the report is attacked on grounds which require explanation it is necessary that the Commissioner also should be examined.[2] It is against established practice to find fault with his report behind his back and to reject it in toto.[3]

O.26, R.10, Notes 6—9.

6. Objections to Commissioner's report.—The Court must fix a date to enable the parties to file objections, if any, to the report of the Commissioner[1] and is bound to enquire into such objections when filed[2] unless the parties agree to, or accept the report.[3] A party refusing to appear before the Commissioner has, however, been held not entitled to object to the report.[4]

Objections to the report of the Commissioner should be taken in the trial Court and cannot be raised for the first time in appeal[5] although the appellate Court has power to consider whether the report was outside or within the scope of the warrant of commission.[6]

7. Commissioner's report, how far binding on the Court.—A Commissioner's report is only evidence in the case. It is in no way binding on the Court. The Court has full power to arrive at its own conclusion even at variance with the report.[1] In fact, the report ought not to be made the sole basis and foundation for the judgment in disregard of the other evidence in the case.[2]

8. Further evidence after the Commissioner's report.—The rule does not contemplate the tender of further evidence after the receipt of the report of the Commissioner except the examination of the Commissioner himself. It does not however prohibit further evidence. The point has to be decided in general principles according to the facts and circumstances of each case.[1] It was held that the party cannot at the last moment adduce fresh evidence after going on with the trial of the case without objection and with the knowledge that the investigation was carelessly done.[2]

9. Sub-Rule (3).—The Court has a discretion to order a fresh commission or not and is not bound to do so in every case where the result of the local investigation is found to be unsatisfactory; it can decide the case on the evidence.[1]

Sub-Rule 3 contemplates a further enquiry by the Commissioner already appointed and not the issue of a fresh commission covering the same ground.[2] The mere filing of objections to a report is no ground for issuing a fresh commission[3] unless the Court is of opinion on considering the objections that the Commissioner has so misconceived his duties as to render his report valueless.[4] If the Court comes to the later conclusion, then it should wipe out and supersede the first report by a specific order to that effect.[5] O.26, R.10, Notes 9—10.

10. Interference with the report.—The Court ought not to interfere with the result of a long and careful local investigation except upon clearly defined and sufficient grounds.[1] It has been laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council and followed in a number of decisions of the High Courts in India, that an appellate Court should not interfere with the finding of the trial Court based on a careful local investigation except upon very strong grounds.[2] But disregard of the report of the Commissioner is not such an error or defect "affecting the merits of the case" within the meaning of S. 105 as to justify interference in appeal.[3]

In Kessowji Issur v. G. I. P. Ry. Co.,[4] [I.L.R. 31 Bom. 381 (392) P. C.] the Privy Council has held that an appellate Court should not as a result of an inspection of the spot of accident, reverse the decisions of the trial Court based on recorded evidence.

1. Commissioner to examine accounts.—In a suit for accounts the usual and proper procedure is first of all to ascertain whether the defendant is liable to account. If the accounts are complicated and require an examination then the Court may appoint a commission under this rule.[1]

The Court may issue a commission even without the consent of parties.[2]

Under S. 265 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (VI of 1908), the Deputy Commissioner is empowered to issue commissions to examine accounts in any suit, appeal or proceeding pending before him.

2. "Is necessary."—Before an order for the appointment of a Commissioner can be made, the examination or adjustment of accounts must be considered necessary.[1]

3. Power of Commissioner to decide questions of law.—The Court cannot delegate its judicial powers to a Commissioner in the matter of taking evidence and determining issues.[1] Thus it is for the Court and not the Commissioner to decide as to the truth or falsity of the account-books[2] or as to whether a certain contract was or was not authorised.[3] In a recent decision of the Privy Council it was held that it is irregular to appoint a Commissioner to give findings on mixed questions of law and fact such as, for instance, the nature of a contract.[4] The Commissioner can determine only the extent, or the quantum and not the factum of liability.[5] The function of the Commissioner is to place himself as an assistant to the Court so as to enable the Court to understand and appreciate the accounts and come to a decision.[6] O.26, R.11, Notes 3—7.

A Commissioner has no power to review as under O. 47, R. 1.[7]

The High Court of Bombay has however held in the undermentioned case[8] that a Commissioner appointed by a Judge on the Original Side of the High Court can decide questions of law arising while accounts are taken.

4. Disobedience of order made by Commissioner.—A Commissioner is an officer of the Court and the Court can issue an attachment to compel a party to obey his order.[1]

5. Non-payment of Commissioner's fees.—The suit should not be dismissed for failure to deposit the Commissioner's fee.[1]

6. Appeal.—An order under this rule is not a decree and is not appealable[1] nor is the order one appealable under O. 43, R. 1. The High Court of Calcutta has however held in the undermentioned cases[2] that an order giving directions to the Commissioner amounts to a decree and is appealable. See Notes to S. 2, sub-S. (2).

Instructions to Commissioner. See Note 1, Pt. (1) and R. 11, Note 2, F.-N. (1).

1. Scope of the rule.—The Court is bound to furnish the Commissioner with the requisite proceedings and issue definite instructions as to what he should do. The Commissioner may, if necessary, apply for enlargement of time fixed for the return.[1]

The rule contemplates the appointment of only one Commissioner. But the appointment of more than one is only a mere irregularity.[2]

2. "Shall be evidence in the suit."—The report of the Commissioner together with the evidence, if any, taken by the Commissioner is evidence in the suit[1] unless the Court is dissatisfied with and directs a further enquiry. But the report has not the effect of a decision in the case.[2]

The Court is not bound to take any other evidence than that furnished by the report, where it sees no reason to doubt its correctness.[3]

3. Objections to the Commissioner's report and to the appointment of a Commissioner.—A party is entitled to file objections to the report of the Commissioner and the Court is bound to give him a reasonable opportunity to produce evidence in support of his objections.[1] But where the reference to a Commissioner has been made by consent, the parties are bound by it and cannot go behind the consent so given.[2]

Objections to the report must be taken in the trial Court and cannot be raised for the first time in appeal.[3]

Powers and duties of the appellate Court.—While the Commissioner's report which has been affirmed by the trial Court should have great weight given to it and not be capriciously deviated from, it is not absolutely binding on the appellate Court.[1] The appellate Court is entitled, therefore, whenever necessary, to scrutinise the report and make such further enquiries into the matter as it may deem proper.[2] O.26, R.12, Note 4.

1. Legislative changes.—

The word "person" has been substituted for the word "persons" which occurred in the old section in order to negative the view that had been held under the old Code that the Court could not appoint a single commissioner.[1]

2. Scope of the rule.—As has been seen in Note 9 to R. 10 the Court has a discretion in the matter of issuing a commission. It is not, under this rule, bound to appoint a Commissioner in every case.[1]

The essential difference between an arbitrator and a Commissioner appointed under this rule is that the latter merely submits his report for the approval of the Court whereas the former has a final authority to settle all matters of difference between the parties. Further. the former is selected by the parties and therefore his decision cannot be questioned except on the limited grounds specified in Schedule II whereas the latter is selected by the Court and the parties are therefore at liberty to challenge his report.[2]

An application for the appointment of a Commissioner is not governed by any rules of limitation.[3]

By S. 12 of the Bengal Estates Partition Act (V of 1897) a Civil Court passing a decree for an undivided share of an estate governed by this Act may cause the same to be executed as prescribed by this rule.

3. "Such person as it thinks fit."—The choice of the Commissioner lies with the Court. But a relation of one of the parties or their pleaders should not be appointed except with the consent of the other party.[1]

4. Appeal.—An order issuing a commission under this rule is not appealable under O. 43, R. 1. Nor is the order, one passed in execution within the meaning of S. 47.[1]

[S. 396.] (1) The Commissioner shall, after such inquiry as may be necessary, divide the property into as many shares as may be directed by the order under which the commission was issued, and shall allot such shares to the parties, and may, if authorized thereto by the said order, award sums to be paid for the purpose of equalizing the value of the shares.

Procedure of Commissioner.

(2) The Commissioner shall then prepare and sign a report or the Commissioners (where the commission was issued to more than one person and they cannot agree) shall prepare and sign separate reports appointing the share of each party and distinguishing each share, (if so directed by the said order) by metes and bounds[5]. PATNA.

Substitute the following for sub-Rules (2) and (3):—

(2) The Commissioner shall then prepare and sign a report or the Commissioners (where the commission was issued to more than one person and they cannot agree) shall prepare and sign separate reports appointing the share of each party and distinguishing each share (if necessary) by metes and bounds. The commissioner or commissioners shall append to the report or where there is more than one, to each report a schedule showing the plots and areas allotted to each party and also unless otherwise directed by the Court, a map showing in different colours, the plots or portions of plots allotted to each party. In the event of a plot being sub-divided, the area of each sub-plot shall be given in the schedule and also measurements showing how the plot is to be divided. Such report or reports with the schedule and the map, if any, shall be annexed to the commission and transmitted to the Court; and the Court, after hearing any objections which the parties may make to the report or reports shall confirm vary or set aside the same.

(3) Where the Court confirms or varies the report or reports it shall pass a decree in accordance with the same as confirmed or varied and, when drawing up the final decree shall incorporate in the decree the schedule, and the map, if any, mentioned in sub-Rule (2) above, as confirmed or varied by the Court. The whole report or reports of the Commissioner or Commissioners shall not ordinarily be entered in the decree. When the Court sets aside the report or reports it shall either issue a new commission or make such other order as it shall think fit.

1. Legislative changes.—

In sub-Rule (1), the words "after such enquiry as may be necessary" have been substituted for "ascertain and inspect the property and shall".

Sub-Rule (3) is almost new.

In sub-Rule (2), the words "or the Commissioners . . . . shall prepare and sign separate reports" have been newly added and the words "shall confirm, vary or set aside the same" have been substituted for the words "shall either quash the same". The object of the latter amendment was to negative the view taken in Janki v. Gouri, (1906) I. L. R. 28 All 75 (76) where, it was held that the Court had no power to vary the report.

2. Mode of effecting partition.—It is not contemplated by the rule that the Commissioner should propose a number of schemes and ask the Court to choose any one of them;[1] only the shares as ascertained by the decree have to be worked out by him. But the Court may in the case of a joint Hindu family with the consent of all co-parceners order, that any part of the property should remain joint.[2] Where a partition cannot be made without destroying the intrinsic value of the property[3] or where it would be inconvenient to disturb the exclusive possession of one co-sharer[4] the Court may also award a money compensation instead of dividing the properties.

3. Partition of non-revenue paying immoveable property.—A partition of Revenue paying land which has the effect of breaking up the joint liability of the sharers for revenue cannot be effected by the civil Court.[1] See S. 54 ante. Therefore when a Revenue paying estate has to be partitioned into several revenue paying estates such partition can be done only by the Collector because the revenue is affected.[2] But where no allotment of separate revenue is asked for, the civil Court is competent to allot the shares leaving the whole estate liable for the whole revenue.[3] The reason is the jurisdiction of the civil Court is restricted only on questions not affecting the right of the Government to assess and collect in its own way the public revenue.

4. Partition of joint-family dwelling house.—In the case of partition of non-revenue paying immoveable property such as a joint-family dwelling house, the Court can actually fix the particular area, rooms or part of the house to be allotted to the respective sharers.[1]

For cases under Partition Act IV of 1893, see[2] and for cases regarding valuation of suits see.[3]

5. Allotment of shares.—The duty of the Commissioner is not to give possession but to allot the shares and prepare a report fixing the shares and distinguishing the same by metes and bounds, if so ordered.[1] The Court after considering the rights and objections of the different parties should make the final allotment.[2] A casting of lots for an equitable distribution of shares is not opposed to the rule and can be resorted to by the Courts.[3] O.26, R.14, Notes 5—9.

An order of the Court approving the allotment and division made by a Commissioner has been held to be binding on the parties even though a fresh decree is not passed in accordance with the report.[4]

6. Objections to Commissioner's report.—Objections to the report can be filed within the period fixed by the Court.[1] When they are not so done in the trial Court they cannot be raised for the first time in appeal.[2] But the High Court has power to see whether the Commissioner has exceeded his jurisdiction and acted within the scope of his warrant of commission.[3]

7. Resistance to Commissioner.—As already seen in Note 4, R. 11 Commissioners are officers of the Court and a process of attachment can be issued by the Court to enforce the orders of the Commissioner. But the Court is not justified in dismissing the suit when the Commissioner is resisted in executing his warrant of commission.[1]

8. Issue of a new commission.—Ordinarily a second commission ought not to be issued on the mere objection of a party.[1] But where the report is unsatisfactory,[2] or the Commissioner has so misconceived his duties as to render his report useless, a second commission may be issued in which case, however, the old report should be superseded.[3]

9. Decree.—The proceedings contemplated by the rule are proceedings in the suit and not in execution[1] and the Court is bound to pass a final decree after perusing the report.[2] The High Court of Madras has held that the Court can pass a final decree suo motu without an application by the party, the reason being that the suit must be considered pending until a final decree is passed.[3] Though the final decree is appealable, no appeal lies against an order of the Court confirming or varying the report.[4]

10. Final decree to be engrossed on stamp paper.—A final decree for partition passed in accordance with the report of the Commissioner must be stamped as an instrument of partition within the meaning of S. 2, Cl. (15) of the Indian Stamp Act (II of 1899).[1] necessary expenses therefor.[1] The rule is not exhaustive and does not prevent the Court from imposing any terms that it chooses as a condition precedent to the issuing of a commission.[2] Nor does an omission on the part of the Court to require the deposit of the expenses prevent the Commissioner from recovering his remuneration from the party at whose instance he was engaged.[3] O.26, R.15, Notes 1—2.

11. Preliminary decree in a partition suit—Appeal.—Under S. 396, Cl. (1) of the old Code corresponding to R. 13 of this order, it was provided that the Court can issue a commission "after ascertaining the several parties interested . . . . and their several rights . . . ." There was a conflict of opinion as to whether such an ascertainment amounted to a decree. It was held by the High Courts of Calcutta[1] and Madras[2] that it did amount to a decree while the chief Court of Punjab[3] held, that it did not. The conflict has now been set at rest by the Legislature by using the words preliminary decree in R. 13 to avoid any possible doubt in the matter.

The object of requiring the expenses to be deposited before hand is, that the Commissioner who is an officer of Court ought not to be driven to a separate suit or execution to get his fees.[4] As to whether an order directing the deposit of fees to the Commissioner is capable of execution, the High Court of Calcutta[5] has held that it can be executed under S. 36 while the High Court of Madras[6] has held that it cannot be so executed. It has been held in the undermentioned cases that the proper course on the failure of the party to deposit the commissioner's fees is to include it in the costs of the suit and enter it in the decree.[7]

But failure to deposit the required fees can afford no ground for rejecting the report[8] or for dismissing the suit.[9]

2. Reduction of Commissioner's Bill when justified.—The reduction or disallowance of a Commissioner's Bill is a matter for the trial Court.[1] The Court will not be justified in re-opening or reducing the fees fixed in the presence of the parties and paid into Court.[2]

Local Amendments.

RANGOON.

The following shall be added as Rules 19 to 26, respectively. (This is added before the amendments of Rules 19 to 22 by the Indian Legislature in 1932):—

"Fees to commissioners for local investigation, and commissioners of partition, or to take accounts, or for the examination of witnesses.

19. Civil Courts in issuing commissions will be guided by the provisions of Rule 15, and subject to the provisions of Rule 23, will exercise their own judgment in fixing a reasonable sum for the expenses of the commission.

Expenses of commissions.

20. Under Government of India Resolution in the Home Department (Judicial, No. 10-1101, dated 21st July, 1875), Judicial Officers are prohibited from accepting any remuneration for executing commissions issued by Courts of other provinces.

Judicial Officers prohibited from accepting fee.

21. It is to be understood that no part of the fee sent for the execution of a commission is to be accepted, either personally or on behalf of Government. The execution of a commission is an official act which judicial officers are bound to perform when called upon and is not work undertaken for a private body.

22. In all cases the unexpended balance, which remains after all charges have been deducted, should be returned to the Court issuing the commission.

Refund of unexpended balance of expenses.

Fees to commissioners of partition or to take accounts or to examine witnesses.

23. The following fees are to be allowed to commissioners of partition or to take accounts, or for the examination of witnesses, namely:—

1. Legislative changes.—

The words "or by a company authorised to sue or be sued in the name of an officer or of a trustee" which occurred in the old section after the word "corporation" have now been omitted. The reason for the omission is that most companies now-a-days are registered, and companies which are unregistered but which are authorised by law to sue must be very few, if any indeed exist, and no special treatment is necessary in respect of these.[1]

2. Suits by or against corporations.—This order deals with the subscription and verification of pleadings in suits by or against corporations; it says nothing about the manner in which the suit itself is to be framed.[1]

A "corporation" is a fictitious or imaginary person invested by the law with the attribute of perpetuity.[2] For the purposes of this order it may be stated to be a body authorised by Law to act as one individual and constituted either by prescription, by the Letters Patent, or by an act of the Legislature.[3] A corporation by prescription is one which has existed as a corporation "from a time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, and therefore, is looked upon in law to be well created". In other words it is a corporation of such antiquity that the consent of the sovereign may be presumed.[3-a] A registered company under the Companies Act is a corporation,[4] but not an unregistered one, unless it is authorised by Law to act as an individual. Unregistered companies so authorised are, as has been seen in Note 1, now practically non-existent.

A corporation must sue or be sued, not in the names of its agents or servants but in its own corporate name,[5] and, in the case of registered companies, in the form given in Appendix A, First Schedule, Form No. 2[6] and described as "the A. B. Company, Limited having its registered office at" or as "A. B. a public officer of the C. D. Company."[7] A description given as "A. B. agent of C. D. Company" is not in conformity with the rule.[8] Where in a suit against two companies, the description given was "the Indian General S. N. R. Co., Ltd. and the Rivers S. N. Co., Ltd. by their joint agent A. B. Rogers" it was held that the suit was substantially against A. B. Rogers and not against the companies referred to.[9] Where, however, relief is really sought against the company, and the error is merely one of misdescription, a suit, though nominally against the agent may be treated as in substance one against the company.[10] Similarly where in a suit by a Municipal Body, the plaintiff was described as "A.B., Chairman of the Municipal Board of . . " but the intention was clear that it was the Municipal Board that was suing, it was held that the defect is merely one of form and cannot be a ground in appeal for the reversal of the decree.[11]

O. 29, R. 1, Notes 2—3.

3. Suit by or against unregistered company.—A suit by or against an unregistered company or unincorporated body of persons must be brought in the names of, or against, all the members of the company or body.[1] Thus an unregistered club or society cannot sue in the name of its secretary.[2] A suit brought in the names of some only of the members of such a society will be dismissed.[3] It was observed by the High Court of Calcutta in the under-mentioned cases[4] that where it appeared that the plaintiff did not know of what persons the company in question was composed, he might sue the company in the name under which it was carrying on the business, provided he has stated in the plaint that he was unable to give a better description of the defendant. This view has, however, not been followed, but has, on the other hand been expressly dissented from by the Allahabad High Court.[5]

Where the company consists of numerous persons the suit may under the provisions of O. 1, R. 8, be instituted by one or more of such persons on behalf of all with the permission of the Court.

O. 29, R. 1, Notes 4—6.

4. Companies authorised to sue and be sued in the name of an officer or secretary.—As has been seen in Note 2 ante, the authority of a company or a body of persons to sue or be sued in the name of an officer or trustee thereof can only be created by prescription or by Letters Patent or by an Act of the Legislature. The Indian Companies Act is one of such Acts of the Legislature.[1] See also Act VII of 1890 under which a company such as the Comptoir National Decompte de Paris may be sued in the name of its Chief Manager.[2]

Where a gift was made to the members of an unincorporated society by a deed and the society was subsequently registered, the registered society can enforce the gift without a formal deed of transfer from the unincorporated society.[3]

5. Foreign corporations.—It is an established rule of Private International Law, that a corporation duly created according to the Law of one State, may sue or be sued in its corporate name, in the Courts of other States[1] and it is not necessary that it should be registered under the Indian Companies Act before it can claim the benefit of this rule in India.[2] Thus a plaint filed in the Delhi Court on behalf of the Singer Manufacturing Company which is incorporated in the United States of America, may be verified by an agent holding a general power-of-attorney from the company as a "Principal Officer" of the company within the meaning of this rule.[3] The fact that the agent also acts for another is not material.[4]

6. "Other principal officer of the corporation."—The official liquidator of a registered company in liquidation is competent to sue on behalf of the company.[1] Where a branch bank was carried on by a manager holding a power-of-attorney under the seal of the company, and such a manager had in his absence delegated, in pursuance of such power, all his authority to an accountant, but such substituted power omitted words giving power to sue, it was held by the Privy Council that such substitute was a "Principal Officer of the corporation" and could sign and verify a plaint by the company.[2] The signing of the plaint by the "principal officer of the corporation" is not invalid merely because he happens to be an am-mukhtear of the corporation.[3]

Where the plaint is signed and verified by an officer other than those specified in the rule, the Court may in its discretion allow the plaint to be amended by filing a properly signed and verified copy of the plaint.[4]

7. "Who is able to depose to the facts of the case."—It is not necessary that the principal officer of the corporation should verify the plaint from actual personal knowledge; he may verify upon his information and belief.[1] According to the Rules of the Calcutta High Court, it is necessary that the fitness of the person verifying the pleading on behalf of the corporation should be proved by an affidavit at the time of presenting the pleading.[2] An insufficiency of verification is not a ground, in appeal, for dismissing the proceedings had in the first Court, in the absence of any prejudice caused to any person by such defect.[3]

8. Subscription and verification of pleadings.—A plaint, on behalf of the corporation, may, under this rule, be signed and verified either

(c) by other principal officer of the corporation.[1]

A Registrar of a Joint Stock Company is not a proper person to represent the company, he being not one of the persons specified.[2] There is a conflict of opinion as to whether the provisions contained in O. 6, R. 14 applies to cases within this rule, so as to enable a plaint by a corporation to be signed and verified by a person duly authorised by it, where, by reason of absence or other good cause it could not be signed by the persons specified in this rule. In Delhi and London Bank, Ltd. v. Oldham[3] their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows:—

"Their Lordships are of opinion that S. 51 of the Code (now O. 6, R. 14), which regulates proceedings taken by or on behalf of ordinary plaintiffs, does not apply to such a case as the present, but that this case must be decided with reference only to S. 435, which expressly applies to corporations." The High Court of Bombay has held that the said decision of the Privy Council must be taken to apply to the particular facts of that case and that it is not an authority for the proposition that O. 6, R. 14 does not apply to cases governed by this rule; and they have consequently held that a power-of-attorney agent is entitled to sign and verify the plaint on behalf of a corporation under the provisions of O. 6, R. 14.[4] The High Court of Lahore[5] and the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind[6] are also of the same opinion.

To enable a principal officer of a corporation to verify a plaint or a written statement, it is not necessary that permission of the Court should be obtained for that purpose; but it should be shown by a statement in the plaint or in the written statement or by an affidavit, that the person purporting to verify, is a principal officer of the corporation and is able to depose to the facts of the case.[6-a]

Where the defence raises the question of the competency of the director to sign and verify the plaint, the defendants are entitled so to cross-examine him as to expose all the facts bearing on that question.[7]

1. Service on Corporations.—The mode of service provided by this rule can be availed of only in cases where there is no mode of service provided by any other statutes.[1] In the case of foreign companies "the place where the corporation carries on business" means the principal place of business in British India.[2] A Railway Company must be deemed to dwell at its principal office.[3] Service at the registered office of a company is essential,[4] though the Secretary may accept service elsewhere than at the registered office.[5] But a service on the solicitor of the company is not sufficient unless the company accepts service and enters appearance.[6]

The mode of service prescribed by the rule can be availed of only after the suit has been properly framed and the person on whom the service

1. Scope of the rule.—It is a general principle of law that a plaintiff who wishes to obtain a decree against several persons must make them all parties to the suit. Where A makes a promise to B, C and D the right to enforce the promise rests with them all, under the provisions of the Contract Act, S. 45. So that all of them are necessary parties to a suit to enforce such promise.[1-a] It was accordingly held under the old Code, which did not contain any provisions corresponding to this Order, that in suits by or against firms, all the members composing the firm were necessary parties.[1-b] This Order has been newly introduced into the present Code and provides, as it were, an exception to the provisions of S. 45, in that it allows two or more partners alone to sue, provided the suit is brought in the name of the firm.[1] A firm as such, has no existence in law; it is a mere abbreviated name for the partners of which it consists, and not a legal entity as a corporation is,[2] and when a suit is brought against a firm, it is precisely as though it were brought in the name of all the partners.[2-a] The effect of using the name of the firm is simply to bring all the partners before the Court and the procedure indicated in this rule is adopted only as a convenient method for denoting the persons who constitute the firm at the time of the accrual of the cause of action.[3] A decree against the firm in the name of the firm has the same effect as a decree against all the partners.[4] This is made clear by the various rules of this Order. Thus, R. 3 provides that in a suit brought in the name of the firm, the plaintiff shall, on a written demand of the defendants, declare, in writing, the names and residences of the partners and that, on such a declaration being made, the suit will proceed as if all the partners had been named as plaintiffs in the plaint. R. 6 provides that where persons are sued as partners in the name of their firm, they shall appear individually in their own names, but all subsequent proceedings shall, nevertheless, continue in the name of the firm. But the Order merely provides a new procedure and does not affect the plaintiff's right of bringing a suit against a firm by impleading all or any of the members as defendants thereto in conjunction with the firm.[5] Where a suit is to be brought against A and B as partners of the firm A, B & Co., the proper form is not to sue them as "A B & Co, by partners A and B" but to sue as follows:—

"1. A, B & Co., a firm
2. A, a partner of the firm
3. B, a partner of the firm".[6]

This order applies only to suits by or against partners and persons carrying on business in names other than their own. The execution of decrees against firms and the attachment of partnership property are dealt with in O. 21. Rr. 49 and 50.

Where a suit is filed in the name of a firm and a decree obtained, the judgment-debtor can validly make a payment of the decree amount to one of the partners and get satisfaction thereof entered.[7]

2. "Any two or more persons".—This rule applies only where there are two or more persons carrying on business in the name of a firm. One single person carrying on business in the name of a firm cannot sue in the name of the firm.[1] Nor can one of several partners carrying on business in the name of a firm, sue in his own name on a cause of action which has arisen in favour of the firm.[2]

3. "Firm"—Meaning of.—Under S. 4 of the Indian Partnership Act (IX of 1932) [S. 239 of the Contract Act, 1872], "persons who have entered into partnership with one another are called individually 'partners' and collectively a 'firm' ''. In the earlier part of the same section it is enacted that "partnership" is the relation between persons who have agreed to share the profits of a business carried on by all or any of them acting for all. A "firm" is thus a short, collective name for the individual members who constitute the partners[1] and, as has been seen in Note 1 above, is not a legal entity or an artificial person as a corporation is. It follows that a firm cannot, as such, enter into a contract and be a member of a partnership[2] nor can it be a party to a reference under the Arbitration Act.[3] It cannot appear in any suit as a firm; if, however, a partner is made a co-defendant along with the firm he may put in a separate defence for himself and one on behalf of the firm.[4]

4. Minor.—S. 30 of the Indian Partnership Act (IX of 1932) [S. 247 of the Contract Act, 1872] provides that a person, who is under the age of majority according to the law to which he is subject, may be admitted to the benefits of partnership, but cannot be made personally liable for any obligation of the firm; but the share of such a minor in the property of the firm is liable for the obligations of the firm. The person under the age of majority cannot, under the Indian Law become a partner by contract, and cannot be one of that group of persons called a "firm", inasmuch as, a contract by a minor is void. In this view, the share of which S. 247 speaks, is no more than a right to participate in the property of the firm after its obligations are satisfied.[1] Where a suit is brought against a firm, the mere fact that there is a minor member of the firm, does not bring the suit within the purview of O. 32 and no sanction is necessary under the provisions thereof where the matter in dispute in such suit is referred to arbitration.[2] According to Law of England a contract by a minor is only voidable and not void. He may be a partner though he cannot be made personally liable for the debts of the firm. A judgment against the firm may be executed against the partnership property including the share of the minor.[3]

5. Suit against manager and owner of the firm.—See O. 30, R. 10, infra.

6. "Carrying on business in British India".—The rule clearly indicates that an action can only be brought by or against a firm in the firm name in which the persons claiming or being, or liable as partners are carrying on business in British India.[1] A foreign firm may carry on business in British India in which case this order will apply to suits by or against it even though the partners themselves are residing outside British India.[2] The partners of a foreign firm who do not carry on any business in British India cannot sue[3] or be sued[4] in the firm name, but must proceed or must be proceeded against individually.[5] O. 30, R. 1, Notes 6—7.

The question whether a firm is carrying on business within jurisdiction, is one of fact depending upon the circumstances of each case. The words "carrying on business" must be understood in their ordinary sense and not as having any special significance.[6] Thus if a firm has an office of its own within jurisdiction at which a partner or a manager is in control carrying on the business, that is sufficient to bring it within the rule.[7] If the firm has only an office within the jurisdiction, at which the business is done for the firm by an agent, the question whether it is carrying on business within jurisdiction depends on the powers and the authority of the agent. If the agent merely has authority to take orders and transmit them to the firm, that is not carrying on business.[8] If, however, the agent has the power to conclude contracts on his own initiative on behalf of the firm, the latter will be taken to carry on business through the agent within the jurisdiction.[9]

See S. 20 Note 8 for a full discussion as to the meaning of "carrying on business".

7. May sue or be sued in the name of the firm.—As has been seen in Note 1, two or more partners can sue in the name of the firm and it is not necessary, that the other partners should be named in the plaint as plaintiffs or should sign it.[1] A suit brought in the name of the firm cannot, therefore, be dismissed on the ground of a non-joinder of other partners; all that the defendant is entitled to, is the disclosure of the names of those partners under R. 2.[2] An addition of one of the partners after the period of the limitation, or the correction of the name of a wrong representative of the firm who has been made a party to the suit, will not amount to an addition or substitution of a new party to the suit within the meaning of S. 22 of the Limitation Act.[3]

The cause of action in respect of a contract with a firm vests in all the partners jointly, and if, after the contract, one of the partners retires and a stranger comes in, the new partnership cannot enforce the contract entered into by the old. Nor can it, by substituting the names of the old partners alter the period of the limitation for instituting the suit or avoid the bar of the limitation.[4] Where a firm continues to be known by its old name even after the original partners are dead though occasionally the name of the actual head of the firm is also added to the old name, the omission of the latter's name in a suit by the firm does not amount to any misdescription.[5] It has been held in the case cited below[6] that in a suit for libel made against a firm all the partners should join as plaintiffs.

8. Firm as "agriculturist".—A firm can be an "agriculturist" within the meaning of S. 2, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), only when, by itself, or by its servants, or by its tenants it earns its livelihood wholly or principally by agriculture carried on within the limits of a district to which the Act extends. The mere fact that an individual partner or even all the partners of the firm earn their livelihood from an agricultural income does not make the firm an "agriculturist". A plaintiff suing a firm which, by itself, does not earn its livelihood by agriculture must be sued only at the place where it carries on business and not where the individual partners reside.[1]

9. Suit by firm on promissory note.—Where a promissory note is executed to A, a partner of a firm, for a debt due to the firm, A is personally entitled to sue on the note although the benefit of the decree would result to the partnership firm.[1] The firm is also entitled to sue on the note, though it is advisable, before suit, to get the instrument endorsed in its name.[2] Where A sues individually on a promissory note executed to the firm consisting of partners A and B, the correct procedure, if B will not join A as co-plaintiff, is to make him a defendant.[3]

10. "At the time of the accruing of the cause of action".—A suit may be brought under this rule in the name of a firm which has been dissolved before the date of the suit, provided the cause of action arose before the date of the dissolution.[1]

11. Suit against firm—Reference to arbitration.—Where a reference is made to arbitration in a suit in which a firm is a party, all the members of the firm who are sought to be bound, must join in making the reference; sub-R. (2) of this rule does not empower one partner alone to refer the case to arbitration so as to bind the other partners who have not agreed to, or joined in, the application for reference.[1] A proceeding before an arbitrator under the Arbitration Act is not a suit and, therefore, the provisions of O. 30 do not apply thereto.[2]

12. Statement of names and addresses.—Both Rr. 1 and 2 provide for the disclosure of the names of partners. Under R. 1 any party may apply to the Court for a statement of the names and addresses of the partners to be furnished as directed by the Court. Under R. 2, a defendant may, on demand in writing, without recourse to Court, ask the plaintiff or his pleader to declare in writing the names and places of residence of the partners.[1] Where a statement under R. 1, or a declaration under R. 2 is made, the Court cannot direct a cross-examination on such statement or declaration nor can it direct the trial of an issue as to who were the partners of the firm at the time of the accruing of the cause of action.[2] But the statement or declaration as the case may be will be treated as embodied in the plaint and will be a necessary part of the cause of action.[3]

13. Subscription and verification.—It is quite sufficient, under the provisions of sub-R. (2), that, in suits by or against firms, the pleading on behalf of the firm is signed and verified by one of the partners composing the firm; it is not necessary that it should be signed by two or more persons, though under sub-R. (1) no suit can be brought in the name of a firm unless it consists of two or more partners.[1]

14. Death of partner before suit.—A suit may be brought against a firm in the name of the firm, even though one of the partners is dead before the institution of the suit,[1] inasmuch as the suit must be deemed to be against the surviving partners; the judgment so obtained against the firm though enforceable against the partnership property, cannot be enforced against the private estate of the deceased partner, unless his legal representatives are actually made parties.[2]

15. Suit against individual partners.—This rule does not affect, in any way, the operation of S. 43 of the Indian Contract Act. In a suit upon a contract made by a partner on behalf of the partnership, the promisee can compel all or anyone of the partners to perform the whole of the promise.[1] As

2. Disclosure of partners' names.—An incomplete disclosure or a wrong declaration of the names of the partners is not a fatal defect to the suit; the proper procedure in such a case is not to dismiss the suit but to allow a dissolved to the knowledge of the plaintiff before the date of suit, there are two modes of service prescribed by this rule:—

(a) Upon any one or more of the partners; or

(b) Upon the manager of the business at the principal place thereof within British India.

A service effected in the above modes is a good service against the firm, and a decree can be passed against it;[2] it is immaterial that all the partners are not individually served,[3] or that all or any of them reside outside British India.[4] If the summons is not served in either of the two modes mentioned above, the service is irregular and no decree can be passed against the firm.[5] But though the firm is properly served by adopting the above modes of service, it is not sufficient to make a member who has not been actually served, a person "who has been individually served as a partner" within the meaning of O. 21, R. 50.[6] That rule provides that a decree obtained against a firm may be executed:-

(b) against any person personally who has been individually served with summons and has failed to appear;

(c) against any person personally who has appeared in his own name under Rr. 6 and 7 of O. 30, or who has admitted in the pleadings that he is, or who has been adjudged to be, a partner;

(d) with the leave of the Court, against any person personally as being a partner of the firm, even though he has not appeared or been individually served in the prescribed manner.

As to the mode of service to be adopted in cases where the firm has been dissolved before the institution of the suit and the effect of not complying with the rule of service so prescribed, see Note 2 below.

2. Dissolution of partnership before suit.—The proviso to this rule deals with the method of service to be adopted where the firm has been dissolved before the date of the suit. If the plaintiff, at the time of instituting the suit, is not aware of the dissolution, the proviso has no application and a service effected in one of the modes mentioned in Cl. (a) or (b) of the rule is good service against the firm, and a decree passed against it can be executed against the partners in the manner prescribed by O. 21, R. 50. If, however, the plaintiff is aware of the fact of dissolution before the date of the suit, he must, if he seeks to make any person liable as a partner, serve it on such person individually. If instead of doing so the service is effected as prescribed by Cl. (a) or (b) only, there will no doubt be a decree against the firm, but it cannot be executed, even with the leave of the Court, personally against the partner not individually served, under sub-R. (2) of O. 21, R. 50.[1] To this extent the proviso to this rule overrides O. 21, R. 50, which allows a decree against a firm to be executed against a partner personally with the leave of the Court even though he has not been served individually.[2] O. 30, R.3, Note 2.

Where a partner dies before the institution of the suit, the partnership gets dissolved under the provisions of S. 42 of the Indian Partnership Act (IX of 1932) [S. 253 of the Contract Act]. If the plaintiff is aware of the death at the date of the suit, he must, if he wishes to make the private estate of the deceased partner liable, implead the legal representatives as parties and obtain a decree against them.[3] But the proviso to this rule does not imply that if the plaintiff was not aware of the dissolution by the death of the partner, the latter's legal representatives can be treated as partners themselves and proceeded against under sub-R. (2) of O. 21, R. 50 in respect of the private estate of the deceased partner. It has accordingly been held by a Full Bench of the High Court of Madras that the fact that the plaintiff had no knowledge of the death of the partner before the suit does not affect the question of the liability of the legal representatives in respect of the private estate of the deceased partner and that the scope of O. 21, R. 50, sub-R. (2) cannot be enlarged by a reference to the rule of service prescribed by the proviso.[4] A different view has been taken by the High Court of Bombay. According to that Court the legal representatives can be proceeded against under sub-R. (2) of O. 21, R. 50, in respect of the private estate of the deceased partner.[5] It is submitted that the Bombay view is not correct. Sub-R. (2) of O. 21, R. 50 applies only to execution against a person as being a partner of the firm, and the legal representatives are, in no sense, the partners of the firm.[6]

"Suppose a partner dies before action brought and an action is brought against the firm in the firm's name. The dead man is not a party to the action so far as his private estate is concerned, for a dead man cannot be sued, though the legal personal representatives of a dead man can be sued in a proper case . . . . If the legal representatives of the deceased partner are not added expressly as defendants and the action is brought against the firm in the firm's name, then judgment can only be obtained as against the surviving partners and be enforced against them and against the partnership assets . . . . I have so far dealt with the case of the death of a partner before action. Now what happens if a partner dies between service of writ and the trial of the action and judgment? In that case equally, the dead man's estate is not bound. Judgment can only be obtained against the surviving partners and enforced against them and against partnership assets".

Where a suit is instituted against a firm which has been dissolved before the date of the suit, the date of the institution, for the purpose of limitation, is the date of the suit and not the date of the service of summons individually upon a partner, subsequent to the institution of the suit.[8]

3. Service by registered post.—As has been seen in Note 1, the only way in which a summons can be served in suits against a firm are those specified in Cls. (a) and (b) of the rule.[1] Therefore where service by registered post has been ordered, the registered letter should be addressed to a partner or to the manager of the business and not to the firm name at the place where the business used to be carried on.[2]

4. "Person having . . . . partnership business".—The person, "having, at the time of service, the control and management of the partnership business", must be a servant of the firm; a receiver or a manager appointed by the Court is not such a person as is referred to in Cl. (b) of the rule.[1]

5. Successive services.—Where more than one service is effected, the time for appearance by the firm runs from the last service. In a case where service was effected on the person in control of the business and five days later, upon a partner, and judgment in default of appearance was signed on the first service before the eight days had elapsed from service on the partner, the judgment was set aside.[1]

6. "Principal place at which the partnership business is carried on".—Where a suit is filed against a firm, service on an agent at the principal place of business of the firm within jurisdiction is good service on the firm, whether any members of the firm are within jurisdiction or not.[1] But where the mandate to the bailiff is to serve the summons at the place of the business of the firm on the manager or managing partner, without specifying the name of the person to be served, it is not within the competence of the bailiff to effect service by the affixture of summons at the residence of the managing partner.[2]

7. "As the Court may direct".—These words do not occur in the corresponding English rule. According to the latter, the plaintiff has an option to serve the summons upon a partner or upon the manager. Under the present rule, the plaintiff has no such option but should obtain the directions of the Court as to the method of service to be followed. If the method prescribed in each particular case is followed and service is so effected, then prima facie there has been good service on the firm.[1]

8. Mortgage suit.—A mortgage suit by or against a firm is on the same footing as other suits relating to the properties of the firm and service of summons or notice on the manager of the firm is service on all the partners of the firm.[1]

9. Ex parte decree against firm.—An ex parte decree passed against a firm after due service under this rule cannot be set aside on the allegation of a partner that he was not duly served. "It can never be said that a decree against the firm is ex parte against one of the partners because he has not appeared."[1]

O. 30, R. 4, Note 1.

1. Joinder of legal representatives.—Under S. 45 of the Contract Act where a person has made a promise to two or more persons, then, unless a contrary intention appears from the contract, the right to claim performance rests, as between him and them, with them during their joint lives and after the death any of them, with the representative of such deceased person, jointly with the survivor or survivors, and after the death of the last survivor, with the representatives of all jointly. Where therefore a contract is made in favour of A and B, A alone cannot enforce the contract without impleading the legal representatives of B, in case B dies before suit. In applying this rule to cases of suits by or against partners in respect of partnership debts, there was, however, a conflict of opinion among the High Courts. All the High Courts except the Calcutta High Court held that in the case of such suits the legal representatives of a deceased partner need not be impleaded as parties.[1] The High Court of Calcutta held that the general rule applied to this class of suits also and that the legal representatives were necessary parties.[2] This conflict has now been set at rest by the enactment of O. 30, R. 4 modifying the operation of S. 45 of the Contract Act so far as the frame of suits relating to partnership is concerned, and making it clear that the Calcutta view ought not to prevail.[3] But the rule will enable a decree to be obtained only against the partnership assets, and cannot be carried further so as to alter the substantive law laid down in S. 45 and fix liability on the private estate of the deceased partner. If the plaintiff wishes to fix such liability, he is bound to make the legal representatives of the deceased partner also parties.[4]

There is a conflict of opinion as whether this rule applies where the suit is not brought in the name of the firm, but by one or more partners in respect of partnership. It was held by the Calcutta High Court in the undermentioned case[5] that the suit need not be brought in the name of the firm, and that this rule was enacted to simply uphold the view of the High Courts under the old Code, that, in suits on behalf of the partnership the legal representatives of a deceased partner were not necessary parties. The High Court of Rangoon has held that where the suit could not be brought in the firm name by reason of the firm having no name at all, this rule does not become inapplicable.[6] The High Courts of Allahabad[7-a] and Lahore,[7] the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind[8] and the Calcutta High Court itself in a later case[9] have held that the rule applies only when the suit is brought in the name of the firm. O. 30, R. 4, Note 1.

Sub-R. (2) of this rule is intended to safeguard the rights of the legal representatives in case, for instance, there should be any collusion between debtors to the estate and the surviving partners. Similarly sub-R. (2) (b) may enable them to claim contribution from the surviving partners under S. 43 of the Contract Act, in the event of there being a partnership liability.[10]

It follows from what has been stated in the above paragraphs that where a partner dies during the pendency of the suit, the suit does not abate but can be proceeded with by or against the firm.[11] This principle will not, however, apply unless two or more persons constituted a firm; where the sole proprietor dies, the suit will abate, unless the legal representatives are brought on the record within the limitation period.[12]

A person who sues some of the partners in their individual capacity, cannot be permitted to prove his case against them as partners of the firm.[13]

R. 5. [New.] Where a summons is issued to a firm and is served in the manner provided by rule 3, every person upon whom it is served shall be informed by notice in writing given at the time of such service, whether he is served as a partner or as a person having the control or management of the partnership business, or in both characters, and, in default of such notice, the person served shall be deemed to be served as a partner. O. 30, R. 5, Note 1.

be served as a partner, but that the person shall be deemed to be served as a partner .... In the absence of a notice consequently, the person must be deemed to have been served as a partner, and if in reality not a partner he should proceed in accordance with R. 8''.[1] The failure to give notice under this rule will expose the plaintiff to the risk of being liable for costs in case the defendant appears under protest under R. 8.[2]

2. Service on Manager.—See R. 3 above.

3. Person served both as Manager and Partner.—Where there is doubt whether the person served is a partner or not, notice may be given that he is served both as a partner in the firm and as the person having the control or management of the partnership business there. This double form of notice has this advantage, namely, that if the person appears denying that he is a partner, judgment can still be signed in default of a proper appearance upon the service upon him as the manager or controller. The assets of the firm will be liable in execution.

As the Order applies only to suits, notices served on the judgment-debtor during the course of arbitration proceedings as a managing partner of the firm will not enable the decree-holder to take execution at once against him without leave of the Court under O. 21, R. 50, sub-R. 2.[1]

1. Appearance of partners.—As has been seen in Note 1 to R. 1, ante, a firm, as such, has no existence in law. It cannot, consequently, appear as such in a suit against partners in the name of the firm. It is, therefore, enacted by this rule that the partners should appear individually in their own names, though all the subsequent proceedings should continue in the name of the firm. The word "individually" does not mean "in person" and, therefore, no partner can be compelled to appear in person.[1] He can appear by an agent or a solicitor or a pleader and such appearance will be an individual appearance within the meaning of the rule.[2] The fact that the firm has been represented by the appearance of one partner does not disentitle another partner from putting in his appearance, the reason, is that if such partner considers that his rights will not be adequately represented by the other partner who has appeared or who has been impleaded, or that his interests are adverse to that of such partner, it is just and fair that he should be allowed to appear individually and resist the claim.[3] O. 30, R. 6, Notes 1—4.

Where a partner does not appear in the suit and has not also been served individually with a summons in the suit, the decree obtained against the firm cannot be executed against him personally except with the leave of the Court under O. 21, R. 50, sub-R. (2). If he does appear under the provisions of this rule, execution can at once issue against him personally under O. 21, R. 50, sub-R. (1).

The only persons who can appear under this rule are persons who allege that they are partners of the firm sued and persons who are sued as partners but who deny that they are such (R. 8). A person merely served as manager cannot appear under this rule (R. 7).

2. "All subsequent proceedings shall continue in the name of the firm". —Where persons are sued as partners in the name of their firm, they should, under this rule, appear individually in their own names, but all subsequent proceedings are to nevertheless continue in the name of the firm.[1]

3. Defence in suits against firms.—Each partner appearing individually can put in a separate written statement but each written statement is the written statement of the firm. It is only when a person is sued personally along with the firm that he may put in a personal defence.[1] Where a person was served as a partner and not individually, and he put in a written statement in his own name, but there was nothing individual in the defence, it was held that there was only a technical flaw which could be corrected by the Court.[2]

Where several partners individually appear and put in separate written statements and such written statements are inconsistent with one another, the plaintiff is bound to meet all the defences and is bound to show that not one of the defences prevent a decree being passed against the firm.[3]

4. Decree in suits by or against firm.—The firm being sued in the firm name judgment can be passed against it only in that name and not against the individual partners though it may be enforced against them personally

The judgment must follow the writ,[1] i.e., the decree must be against the firm in the firm name and if one of the partners fails to appear no decree can be passed against him separately for default of appearance.[2] But the judgment has the effect of a judgment against all the partners as partners[3] and therefore, the assets of the firm are primarily liable to satisfy the decree.[4] Whether a particular partner is also personally liable to satisfy the decree can only be decided in execution under O. 21, R. 50.[5] A judgment entered against a firm may be a ground for a valid cause of action against an individual partner and an action may be brought upon it against him.[6]

Synopsis.

1. Scope of the rule.
2. Party appearing under protest not entitled to file written statement on his own behalf.
3. Party appearing under protest if can question liability of firm.
4. Defence of party entering appearance under protest in proceeding under O. 21, R. 50.

1. Scope of the rule.—This rule enables a person who is served with summons as a partner under R. 3 to appear under protest and deny that he is a partner. The effect of such an appearance has nothing to do with the merits of the suit but nullifies the service altogether as regards the firm.[1] But the plaintiff is not precluded thereby from otherwise serving the summons on the firm. He may disregard the appearance of the person denying that he is a partner and may again effect a service upon a partner or partners or upon the manager of the business as required by R. 3, or he could contend that the person served was a partner at the time, the cause of action accrued, and apply on that basis either to have the appearance entered struck out, or to have the denial of partnership struck out of the appearance.[2] According to the High Court of Bombay the person protesting that he is not a partner has a right to have the issue as to whether he was a partner of the defendant firm, tried in the suit itself and not be left hanging over him until execution-proceedings are taken out against him under O. 21, R. 50.[3] On the other hand, in the undermentioned case of the Calcutta High Court, Mr. Justice Buckland was of the opinion that an inquiry of the kind prior to judgment is not within the contemplation of the rule, inasmuch as there is an express provision in O. 21, R. 50 for the decision of the question before according leave to proceed in execution.[4]

2. Party appearing under protest not entitled to file written statement on his own behalf.—A party who has been served as a partner under R. 3 and entered appearance under protest, is not entitled to file a written statement on his own behalf denying that he is a partner.[1]

3. Party appearing under protest, if can question liability of firm.—A defendant entering appearance under protest is not precluded from taking alternative defences, namely, that he is not a partner and that, assuming that he is a partner, the firm is not liable.[1] It was held in England in the undermentioned case[2] that under the corresponding rule (O. 48-A, R. 7) of the rules of the Supreme Court, such a defence was not open to the defendant and this view was adopted by the High Court of Calcutta in the case cited below.[3] That rule, however, has been substituted by a new rule in 1929 under which such a defence is now permitted in England. The English case, therefore, has now been rendered obsolete in England.

4. Defence of party entering appearance under protest in proceeding under O. 21, R. 50.— A files a suit against a firm and serves B with a summons as a partner of the defendant firm. B appears under protest stating that he is not a partner, and a decree is passed in his absence against the firm. A then seeks to execute the decree personally against B under the provisions of O. 21, R. 50, sub-R. (2). B can, in such proceedings, defend himself on the ground that he is not a partner of the firm. He can also take any other defence that is open to him, unless, to allow him to do so, would be to negative any rule of procedure.[1]

R. 9. [New.] This Order shall apply to suits between a firm and one or more of the partners therein and to suits between firms having one or more partners in common; but no execution shall be issued in such suits except by leave of the Court, and, on an application for leave to issue such execution, all such accounts and inquiries may be directed to be taken and made and directions given as may be just.

Synopsis.

1. Scope of the rule.

Suit between partners. See Note 1, Pt. (2-a).

1. Scope of the rule.—The general rule of procedure is that a person cannot be both a plaintiff and a defendant.[1] This rule provides an exception to that rule[2] and makes this order applicable to suits between firms and one or more of the partners therein, and to suits between firms having one or more partners in common.[2-a] A suit may also lie by one firm against another

Suit against person carrying on business in name other than his own.

Synopsis.

1. Scope of the rule.
2. Non-resident foreigner.
3. "All rules under this order shall apply."

1. Scope of the rule.—In order to maintain a suit against a firm in the name of the firm, there must be two or more persons who are alleged or who claim to be partners therein.[1] It follows that a single person cannot constitute a firm, though he is carrying on business in a name, and style other than his own. This is made clear by the use of the words "as if it were a firm" and "so far as the nature of the case will permit" in this rule.[2] Such a person cannot, therefore, sue in the name of the firm, but must sue in his own name.[3] Where, however, he files a suit in the name of the firm, but is willing to amend the plaint by inserting the words "(plaintiff) carrying on business under the name and style of (firm)", the amendment should be allowed on terms that he should pay all the costs incurred up to the date of the amendment.[4] Where the title of the plaint mentioned the plaintiff as "A, owner of the shop C", there is no mis-description inasmuch as the plaintiff is A and not the shop C.[5]

O. 30, R. 10, Notes 1—3.

But though a single person trading in a firm name cannot sue in the name of a firm, he can be sued in that name under the provisions of this rule.[5-a] But the business must be carried on in British India and must be an existing one at the time when the suit is instituted.[6] If the sole proprietor dies, no suit can be brought against him in the name of the firm, for such a suit will be only a suit against a dead person and therefore a nullity.[7] The proper form of the suit will be against the legal representatives of the deceased proprietor.[8] Similarly if he dies, pending the suit, it will abate unless his legal representatives are brought on the record within the prescribed period of limitation (90 days from the date of his death).[9]

2. Non-resident foreigner.—It has been held in England that English Courts cannot seek to exercise jurisdiction over a single trader residing in a foreign country, notwithstanding the fact that he carries on business within the jurisdiction.[1] In this country, it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that, there is nothing in this rule which says anything about residence either in or without the jurisdiction of the Court, and that a Court can exercise jurisdiction over persons who carry on business within its local limits though they are resident outside it.[2] The same question came before the consideration of the Privy Council in the undermentioned case[3] where the Courts below had assumed they had such jurisdiction. Their Lordships of the Privy Council did not, however, decide the point but left it with the remark that the assumption appeared to their Lordships to require more attention than it had received.

3. "All rules under this order shall apply".—All the rules of this order relating to suits against firms have been made applicable by the latter part of the rule to suits properly laid against a person trading in a name other than his own so far as the nature of the case will permit. Thus the business must be carried on in British India and the defendant may be asked to disclose his real name and address (Rr. 1 and 2). Service may be effected as provided under the rule (R. 3) and the Court has got power to order substituted service when no person having control or management of the business can be found.[1] R. 4 will not apply" (see Note 1). The defendant must appear individually in his own name though the subsequent proceedings might continue in his assumed name. Judgment can be passed against him in the firm name and execution will issue as provided by O. 21, R. 50. Where the service has only
